

Spoiled by Mr. Russell Chapter 1058

Children typically follow their mothers, as the saying goes. Alexander, for example, resembled his mother, which was why she did not like him very much.

Over the years, she tried her best to plan more for her son, and with the support of the Riggs family in the future, she could feel much more at ease.

She took a sip of tea and then closed her eyes with the intention of napping. She then heard footsteps, so she peeked over. She was terrified by what she saw. Ralph was covered in dust and blood as if he had been beaten to the ground by someone.

He walked in embarrassedly.

"Oh my goodness!" With an exclamation, Margaret stood so abruptly that the blood rushed to the top of her head. Her eyes darkened, and she almost fainted.

servant next to two quick steps and rushed forward to support her, looked at him up close and took another deep breath, "What's the matter with you? Did something at his body. To say he looked disheveled would be an understatement. His clothes were ripped he did not expect his mother to be in the yard. He went to

Are they seeking death?" Margaret was fuming and stabbed the ground with her crutches. Every time she said a sentence, the ground made a thud. "Who did this? Don't little injury. Don't be too angry." Ralph, trying to reassure her, attempted to brush the matter a bath and change. Now that he was to ask, "Mom,

your injury? Tell me, who hurt you like this?"