Chapter 362

"It's not written on your face but in your eyes. Your eyes seem wise.

"He communicated in English, and he spoke it very fluently.

"You're very well-spoken."

Without responding to his words, Lily gave him an irrelevant compliment.

"Thank you."

The man happily took advantage of it and introduced himself generously, "Hello, my name is Noah,"

As he said that, he stretched out a hand toward Lily with a smile.

Lily got to her feet. She had no interest in shaking hands with him and replied, "It's time."

The organizers had come and asked them to return to the venue again.

The noise suddenly subsided, and the silence made Lily feel much more comfortable.

When she returned to her seat, she saw Noah sitting diagonally behind her.

No wonder Lily had no impression of him before.

Noticing that she was looking at him, Noah happily waved at her.

Lily glanced at him, then turned back around with a blank expression on her face.

‘Why is this guy so enthusiastic about a stranger?’

"Everyone's answer sheets have been reviewed. Out of many considerations, we have decided to announce the final results now. However, before the announcement, Mr. Parker has something to say and would like to chat with everyone."

After speaking, the examiner got up and walked away.

"Mr. Parker, please."

There was warm applause from the crowd, and a regal-looking older man who always carried himself meticulously walked in amid the applause. He wore a well-pressed suit, and his steps were steady and powerful. He walked to his seat, looked around, and then sat down.

Maybe it was just her imagination, but Lily felt that his eyes had stopped for a split second when they reached her.

Was it because of Lisa? Although Mr. Parker was a bit stubborn, he should disdain nepotism.

"I'm pleased to see all of you. The ones who have managed to come here are the best of the best in the past two years," Mr. Parker cleared his throat and said.

Before the crowd expressed their happiness, his face sank, and he continued, "But I'm also heartbroken to see what you all did earlier. What happened to professionalism?"

His words confused the crowd.

Nobody knew what he meant.

Before these people had time to cheer, he wiped away their smiles.

They got replaced by embarrassment and awkwardness.

Lily thought it was a little funny. She pursed her lips and said nothing.

"Mr. Parker, why do you say this? You can criticize us if we've done something wrong. Did someone upset you?" one of the participants growled.

"Mr. Parker, the test questions were designed to confuse people. Neither of them was your work, right?"

someone proposed to prove their idea.
