Chapter 386

‘God knows!’

The way she rolled her eyes was so adorable to Alexander that he smiled. The joy spread from his eyes to every corner of his face, delightful like the spring breeze.

"All right, let bygones be bygones. Let's not talk about that anymore."

Then, he raised his hand to caress the top of her head and asked, "Who called?"

With a pout, she patted down her hair and thought to herself in confusion, 'Let bygones be bygones? He's the one who was angry yesterday. Yet today, he seems like a completely different person'

However, seeing that Alexander was back to his usual self, Lily could no longer be bothered.

"Lisa called. She invited me to dinner today and said I would go. So, do you have any plans today? If you don't, then I'll go see her."

"Nope. You can go."

He smiled.

Alexander had two other clients he had to meet.

Although it did not matter, he wanted to settle any business-related things in one sitting since they were already in Westwood.

"By the way, I heard you mentioned Mr. Corden?"

Upon hearing this, Lily instantly laughed.

"Did you think that it was the same Mr. Corden from yesterday? That was my first thought, too, when Lisa mentioned that name, but no, it's just a coincidence that they both have the same surname. This

Mr. Corden is the father of a little boy I rescued. He wishes to thank me personally. Don't you think how coincidental this is? The few Hyderland people I've met here all have the same surname. Could it be that their entire ancestry line relocated here?" Although Lily just made a casual guess, it piqued Alexander's interest.

'Is the surname "Corden" just famous among Hyderland people who live in Westwood? Could it be that this is all just a coincidence and that I'm just being overly sensitive?' "when did you save someone's son?" he asked.

He was more interested in what his wife was capable of than someone's last name.

They had only been apart for a few days, yet it seemed like she had been through so much.

"It was just a coincidence. The other day, I was at a restaurant, and the child had a food allergy. I knew a little about what to do, so I saved him. I didn't overthink about it back then," she explained nonchalantly.

Hearing this, he lowered his head and kissed her head.

"You're amazing! What can you not do?"

"You should be asking what I can do instead!"

She giggled as she lowered her head to avoid his touch.

"Okay, I have to confirm with Lisa and get changed."

When she got to the bedroom, she whipped around and said, "I won't be bringing you with me today!"

Hearing this, Alexander clutched his heart in one hand and cried, "Your words hurt my heart!"

This made Lily laugh even louder.

Lily and Lisa planned to meet up at noon.

The Mr. Corden guy said he was a busy man.

However, he had good faith. He offered to meet up with them either for lunch or dinner.

Even so, he mentioned that lunch would be the best option as he had a client to meet in the evening.

'Tsk, tsk Businessmen are experts at time management, just like Alexander. This is supposed to be a special visit, but he managed to squeeze in some work throughout his time here.

He even has work today!'

Lily thought to herself.

To be honest, Lily did not enjoy these kinds of social interactions.

She would rather spend her time in front of flowers and herbs for her perfume.
