

Chapter 1599 The Brutal Training

Trevor assumed the identity of Raven to conceal his true identity, and was tasked by Lone Wolf to complete a series of missions.

As the instructor of the training camp, Trevor had first-hand experience of the rigorous training that was required to be a member of Mobius.

The training involved various physical tasks such as shooting, knife fighting, cross-country running with weights and wrestling, which even adults would struggle to complete.

The training regimen was brutal and unforgiving, with the tasks becoming increasingly arduous and demanding.

As night approached, the young recruits, who were still underage, finally completed their training tasks, exhausted and covered in sweat and dust.

Trevor watched silently from the sidelines, secretly observing Esteban.

He had been targeted by Jules and his followers during the wrestling section.

Esteban showed some natural talent for fighting, but his skills were still in their early stages.

When he faced Jules and his gang, Esteban's limited abilities made it nearly impossible for him to win, and he was beaten badly.

Due to the strict rules of the Mobius training camp, Trevor could not interfere and was forced to stand by and watch as chaos unfolded.

Mobius operated on a philosophy of strength, believing that those who were able to form their own factions were powerful enough to do so.

In their eyes, anyone who was bullied by a group was simply not strong enough.

Mobius' simplistic and unreasonable logic was the root of the many factions within the organization.

After the intense training, Trevor approached Esteban with a poker face and asked, "Did you dislocate your arm?"

Esteban, with his hand on his injured arm, glared at Trevor like a wary wolf cub protecting itself from predators.

He was clearly skeptical of Mobius and its principles.

Trevor chuckled inwardly.

He knew that the more resistant and wary Esteban was, the more valuable he would be as a Trojan horse within Mobius.

Trevor understood that only a sharp and intelligent person could be trusted to carry out such a delicate operation.

He could sense that Esteban stood out from the other aggressive boys in the training camp.

While he might not have been the most righteous or kind individual, his concern for the orphanage director demonstrated that he possessed a conscience and sense of humanity.

Despite this observation, Trevor knew it was not appropriate to engage in lengthy conversations with Esteban, given their short acquaintance.

Instead, he maintained a stern and austere demeanor as he commanded, "Follow me to the infirmary. In Mobius, being disabled holds no value. The useless are discarded."

Esteban clenched his jaw and reluctantly trailed behind Trevor to the infirmary.

Inside, there was no doctor in sight and the supplies were scarce.

To Mobius, the newcomers in the training camp were merely disposable resources. Minor injuries were treated simply, while serious ones were discarded and left to die outside.

Although a dislocated arm was not a minor injury, it was not severe enough to warrant expulsion from the camp.

However, if left untreated, it could lead to permanent disability.

Trevor took charge of the situation, saying, "Turn around and let me see your dislocated arm!"

He knew how to treat him due to his training in the medical skills of the Scott family. For him, treating a dislocated arm was a minor issue and posed no challenge.
