

Chapter 1681 The Medical Community In Glareder

While standing amidst the crowd, Trevor maintained a slight smile and refrained from speaking.

However, his serene demeanor only infuriated the doctors present. They clenched their teeth and shot glares at Trevor.

Despite the pin-drop silence, the doctors felt as if they had received a stinging slap, leaving them with a searing pain.

Those who were previously driven away failed to provide a viable treatment plan. However, Trevor managed to solve the problem. Didn't it prove that all the other doctors were incompetent as he ridiculed?

The doctors seethed with anger, yet they were powerless to do anything.

Midnight, unaware of the brewing tension between the doctors and Trevor, wore an apathetic expression and turned to the steward. He instructed him, "Notify the servants in the villa that this young man will serve as my personal physician from now on. They are prohibited from obstructing his entry or exit."

Upon hearing this, the steward calmly nodded his head.

Meanwhile, the doctors erupted in commotion.

"What?"

"This guy as his personal doctor?"

Prescott covered his face with his hand and gasped in disbelief, wanting to confirm if it was true. But when he saw Midnight's imposing figure, he recoiled in fear and did not dare to speak.

Midnight, dissatisfied with the surrounding discussions, scowled and was about to banish the doctors.

However, just as he was about to act, the door of the hall swung open, revealing a middle-aged man in a pristine white coat, trailed by his female assistant.

The newcomer was slightly balding, but exuded an air of confidence that was almost palpable. He strode towards Midnight, his smile enthusiastic and unwavering.

"Mr. Midnight, please forgive my tardiness. I was performing an operation," he exclaimed.

Trevor, standing to the side, observed the middle-aged doctor with keen interest.

He stroked his chin thoughtfully and concluded that the doctor was highly skilled, possessing an admirable degree of self-assurance. The natural way in which he spoke to the leader of a faction of Mobius, indicated that.

Prescott, who had been watching the exchange with a sardonic expression, suddenly confirmed his suspicion.

"Raven! I'm not sure how you've managed to charm my uncle, but Sumner is here, and you must be exposed! Dr. Sumner is widely acknowledged as the most skilled surgeon in Glareder. Many of the Mobius faction's members have sought his services."

Prescott didn't reveal the whole truth.

It was clear that Sumner Morpew, aside from being the best surgeon in Glareder, was also the most insidious doctor in the city.

Trevor calmly raised his eyebrows, his gaze fixed on Prescott. "Oh, really?"

However, the other doctors were not interested in Trevor's and Prescott's confrontation. They quickly turned their attention to Sumner when they saw him and surrounded him, seeking his help.

"Dr. Sumner, you're finally here. Please talk to Mr. Midnight," they pleaded.

"Dr. Sumner, you didn't see what happened earlier. That man who suddenly appeared insulted us and even went as far as saying that the doctors in Glareder are all useless!
Can you believe it?" another doctor chimed in.

"Yes! It's not just an insult to us, but to the entire medical community of Glareder!" added a third doctor.

Trevor almost burst out laughing upon hearing their comments.

Glareder was just a small, sinful city. How dare they call it a "medical community"?

He shook his head in disbelief.

Sumner, upon hearing the other doctors' remarks, frowned and looked at Trevor, assessing him silently without saying a word.

The other doctors became anxious and quickly began to flatter Sumner.

"Dr. Sumner, as we all know, you are the top representative of the medical community in Glareder. This man is just bluffing, and obviously doesn't take you seriously."

"That's right. Dr. Sumner, please teach him a lesson. Otherwise, he will continue to be arrogant and ultimately tarnish the esteemed reputation of Glareder's medical community."
