

Chapter 1732 You Are Forbidden To Leave The City!

The thought jolted Trevor into immediate action. He answered swiftly, his voice filled with urgency, "What happened?"

Dominic's worried voice came through the line.

"The route we planned to take is the same as the human trafficking route used by the Black Gold Union! The wharf is now blocked by Mobius, and we can't evacuate from there."

Trevor let out a sigh of relief, grateful that his father and grandfather were not in immediate danger.

However, the fact that they were still trapped in Glareder with the wharf blocked made him grow serious.

In a deep, grave tone, Trevor spoke. "Even if there is internal strife within Mobius, they haven't lowered their guard. Escaping the city won't be easy. You should go back to the black market and find a hiding place for yourselves. I will try to find a solution later."

Trevor's face suddenly turned serious, catching Patrice's attention. She anxiously asked, "What's wrong?"

Trevor trusted Patrice greatly and decided to confide in her.

"The people I planned to rescue have already been released from prison. I intended to help them leave Glareder through the dock, but it's now blocked by Mobius."

Patrice looked helpless as she responded, "Now, anyone trying to leave the city will be thoroughly scrutinized by Mobius, both at the borders and the dock. It's incredibly challenging to escape now."

As soon as Trevor heard the mention of the "borders", his eyes lit up. He regarded Patrice with a mischievous smile and exclaimed, "I have an idea!"

Let's cross the border to leave the city!"

He then winked at her and added, "But you'll have to cooperate with me."

Patrice felt a shiver of unease at the wicked gleam in Trevor's eyes but reluctantly asked, "Tell me!"

In the depths of the clandestine stronghold belonging to the Bradley Organization, Elwood and Ronald found solace in the black market. Trevor then swiftly conveyed a message to them, revealing an escape route and instructing them to rendezvous with him.

Reunited with his father and grandfather, Trevor beckoned the two elders to take their seats in the back of the car. "Get in," he urged with determination.

Assuming the driver's seat himself, Trevor set off in the speeding vehicle, propelling them towards the border of Glareder.

Their journey, however, was interrupted by an unwelcoming assembly of individuals who obstructed their path.

The border patrol team encircled them, their countenances displaying hostility.

Their voices resonated as they pounded on the car window, bellowing, "Descend this instant! Who are you? Do you still intend to leave the city?"

Trevor, with an air of indignation, lowered the car window and retorted with a snort, "Are you blind? How dare you stop my car?"

Unfamiliar with Trevor's identity, the patrol members persisted in their arrogance, questioning, "Who do you think you are? We have received explicit orders from our superiors. Numerous prisoners have escaped from the prison today, and the authorities are actively pursuing them. We have been instructed that no one is permitted to leave Glareder!"

However, the captain of the border patrol team recognized Trevor amidst the commotion. He swiftly dismissed his subordinates and urgently exclaimed, "Silence! How dare you address him in such a manner?! This is the official killer of Mobius! Understand?"

Turning his gaze towards Trevor, the captain approached with deference and spoke respectfully.

"Mr. Raven, I apologize. Our leader has issued a strict order prohibiting anyone from crossing the border at this time. It would be best for you to turn back, alright?"

Raven, the official killer of Mobius, stood before the border guards, his superiority evident compared to the theirs.

Trevor's countenance was cold and fierce as he delivered a strong rebuke.

"Are you deliberately seeking death? I, too, possess an order from my superior allowing me to depart from the city. Do you comprehend? Get out of my way!"

Caught in a dilemma, the captain wrestled with conflicting desires. He did not wish to defy his leader's command, nor did he want to provoke Trevor. Helplessly, he said, "Mr. Raven, I must at least inspect your vehicle to ensure that no suspicious individuals accompany you outside the city."

Trevor relinquished his icy expression, replacing it with a sly, taunting smile. He scrutinized the captain from head to toe and responded, "Oh? Are you certain you want to search my car? Ha ha, just do it."

With Trevor's permission granted, the captain swallowed nervously and prepared to conduct the inspection personally.

As he opened the front passenger door, he was greeted by the sight of a man bound tightly with ropes, his mouth covered by tape.

What astonished the captain even more was the presence of an Ouroboros tattoo adorning the man's arm.

The kidnapper turned out to be another member of Mobius, an official killer at that.

This individual, none other than Patrice, had disguised herself as a Mobius killer.

The captain's face turned pale, his brow dampened with perspiration. Deep regret consumed him.

Damn it! He had unknowingly become entangled in a conflict between factions.

It appeared that Raven intended to abduct him and take him out of the city for killing!

Only then did the captain comprehend the true motive behind Trevor's inquiry about the inspection.

Regret had arrived too late.
