

Chapter 1760 Jonah Was Making A Fool Of Himself

Observing Trevor's and the director's lack of response, Collen assumed they were intimidated. He arrogantly adjusted his tie and continued, "I speak on behalf of the Singh Group. You should feel honored that your land caught the attention of the Singh Group! Don't be ungrateful. Hand over the land willingly, and it will benefit everyone!"

As Mateo rushed in, he overheard Collen boasting about representing the Singh Group. This incensed him, and he shouted, "A vice general manager of a subsidiary company shamelessly claiming to represent the Singh Group! You're not worthy! Don't tarnish the reputation of the Singh Group here!"

Collen's anger surged, and he was about to retort, but then he turned to face Mateo, the general manager.

His curses were silenced, and he felt ashamed and infuriated.

Witnessing Collen's frustration, Trevor couldn't help but jest, "You were so arrogant just a moment ago. It turns out you're just a vice general manager? How dare you act so superior in public?"

Trevor's voice struck a chord with Mateo, who was now certain that Trevor was the same person he spoke to on the phone. The mockery directed at Collen further solidified his belief that Trevor was the new major shareholder.

With his newfound confidence, Mateo spoke in a solemn tone. "Mr. Singh, I will report your actions to the board of directors. It remains to be seen whether you can continue as the vice general manager!"

Collen's face turned ghastly pale, and he remained speechless for a long moment.

Jonah, unaware of Mateo's identity, assumed Collen's silence was due to anger over the recent events.

Seeking redemption for his actions, he shouted at his men, "Damn it! Who are you waiting for? Surround this man!"

His men swarmed and encircled Mateo, preparing to make their move.

But before they could act, Trevor intervened firmly, shouting, "Stop!"

Trevor's imposing presence had left a lasting impression on these hooligans, and his loud command shocked them.

Fuming with anger, Jonah scolded his men, "What the hell are you doing? Beat him up now!"

The men hesitantly continued to approach Mateo.

Trevor, eyeing Jonah playfully, ridiculed loudly, "Hiring these men with the money of the Singh Group is certainly an eye-opener. Now you want them to attack the general manager of the Singh Group!"

Mateo felt a wave of panic as he found himself surrounded, but anger soon replaced his fear.

He shouted fiercely, directing his ire at Collen, "Collen! How could you embezzle money from the Singh Group and hire such a bunch of hooligans!"

As the hooligans exchanged looks, they realized that the money Jonah had given them was, in fact, embezzled from the Singh Group.

They exchanged hushed whispers, swallowing nervously, before evil grins spread across their faces.

Then they spoke in unison. "If you're paying us, we'll do whatever you ask. But since it's money from the Singh Group, we'll respect the general manager."

Jonah's fear escalated as he saw his followers once again defying him.

He seethed with anger. You money-driven villains! I'll teach you a lesson someday!

Helpless in the current situation, Jonah turned to Collen for assistance.

Little did he know that Collen was infuriated by Jonah's actions and silently cursed him.

You fool! Not only did you provoke Mateo, but you also exposed that I stole money from the company! Why did I involve such an idiot in my plans?
