

Chapter 1761 Who Allowed You To Leave

Without waiting for Collen to respond, Mateo stepped out from among the hooligans and pointed directly at Collen, scolding him, "What a shame for the Singh Group! You always engage in shady dealings using your position as vice general manager!"

Collen felt a surge of humiliation as Mateo publicly chastised him. He was in the wrong, but it was difficult for him to bear such open criticism.

Fuming with anger, Collen turned to face Trevor, whose playful expression only intensified his frustration. Gritting his teeth, Collen mustered his resolve and declared, "Mateo, be lenient wherever you can. If I succeed in running for the presidency, I will inherit the shares that my grandpa has put in the trust fund. Then I will become the chairman and CEO of the Group!"

Mateo paid no heed to Collen's nonsense. Instead, he thought to himself.

The person standing by your side, watching the show, is the biggest shareholder of the Singh Group, second only to Tucker's shares! Tucker's shares cannot be touched at the moment, resulting in this person holding the most power in the Singh Group now. If you offend him, your dream of becoming the CEO is simply wishful thinking!

With a firm resolve, Mateo spoke coldly, his face stern. "I will report your actions to the board of directors. Let's see how you'll handle the campaign then!"

"Don't even think about being the CEO! Mr. Singh built the Group from scratch, but you can't claim to be his true successor!" Mateo firmly rebuked Collen, "Mateo firmly rebuked Collen.

Undeterred, Collen glared back with resentment and retorted, "I will definitely compete for the position of CEO. Just wait and see!"

Trevor, not letting Collen leave so easily, stopped him and turned to the lawyer for guidance.

"What should we do about Collen's embezzlement of the Group's assets for personal gain?"

The lawyer serving the Group swiftly changed his stance as Mateo regained the upper hand.

He maintained a facade of seriousness while addressing Collen, "Collen, you need to make restitution for the embezzlement within this month, or you'll likely face at least five years in jail for this business crime."

Collen's rage reached a boiling point as the lawyer confronted him.

"You're such a snob! How much have you benefited from me? Now you're turning against me?" Collen accused.

Unfazed by Collen's outburst, the lawyer maintained his professional composure and replied calmly, "As the chief lawyer of the Group, my responsibility lies in protecting the interests of the Group, not personal gains. Collen, I hope you understand."

Trevor chimed in, adding to Collen's growing list of accusations, "Collen even used illegal means to cut off funding for the orphanage. Has he violated the law in doing so?"

Before the lawyer could respond, Collen let out a low, fierce roar, "I will pay for it! With my own money! Do you hear me clearly? Can I go now?"

Trevor, amused by Collen's fiery display, shook his hand with a smile and teased, "Goodbye, Collen!"

Collen, still visibly upset, stomped away and left the orphanage.

Seeing Collen's departure, Jonah also attempted to sneak away from the escalating situation.

However, Trevor had no intention of letting Jonah, the mischievous troublemaker, off the hook so easily. He knew that if he hadn't intervened, the director might have suffered even more.

With a firm tone, Trevor halted Jonah, saying, "Stop! Who allowed you to leave?"

Turning to the hooligans, he spoke deliberately. "The money of the Singh Group is not that easy to accept! Go and teach Jonah a lesson, or I'll be the one teaching you all a lesson! You'll be held accountable by the Group, and there will be no escaping the consequences. You'll all end up in prison!"