

Chapter 1765 Did Tucker Die

Despite Collen silencing Jeanette, his expression showed his unease. He stared at Trevor with twitching facial muscles, as if asking, "Is this alright?"

Trevor, however, wasn't one to let things go easily. He smiled at Jeanette and continued, "Didn't you owe me an apology after insulting me?"

Jeanette's anger reignited at Trevor's words. She pulled away from Collen's hand and retorted, "Who do you think you are? You are not deserving of my apology!"

Collen was caught off guard by Jeanette's response.

He hurriedly covered her mouth again and insisted she apologize.

Gritting his teeth, Collen whispered, "Apologize!"

Seeing Jeanette's angry and confused expression, Collen let out a sigh and quietly explained, "This man is the general manager's confidant. It's a critical moment in the run for the president of the Singh Group. We can't mess this up. But don't worry. I won't let him get away with it!"

Upon hearing Collen's explanation, Jeanette reluctantly offered a low voice apology. "I'm sorry."

Observing the pair's concession, Trevor smiled and continued to address Jeanette, "Offending me isn't the main issue here. I'll let you go. However, you acted arrogantly even if you didn't arrive at work until afternoon. I suspect this isn't the first time you've behaved this way. Do you believe you were hired to loaf around? Could it be that Mr. Singh is using his power for personal gain?"

Jeanette couldn't contain her frustration any longer. All the grievances she had bottled up needed an outlet. She screamed hysterically, "So what?! Do you want to get me fired?"

A flicker of imperceptible cruelty passed through Collen's eyes. He clenched his teeth and spoke in a heavy voice.

"Enough! Don't think you can feel safe just because you work for the general manager! One day, when I become the president, you better consider whether you'll be kicked out of this company!"

Trevor dismissed the threat with a disdainful snort.

"I'm not one to throw people out of the company on a whim like some arrogant individuals. However, company rules cannot be casually disregarded. Mr. Singh, do you really want to keep an employee who idles around like your girlfriend? I must report this to the general manager. If she's been consistently late, her salary should be deducted accordingly. It's the company's policy. Judging from her nonchalant attitude, it seems she's habitually late. Therefore, she should be fined based on the company's rules!"

Trevor's continuous mention of the company rules infuriated Collen, but he could do nothing but comply.

Under the scrutiny of Trevor and Jeanette's bewildered gaze, Collen remained silent for a long moment.

Finally, with a stern expression, he took out his phone and called the company's executive staff, instructing them, "Jeanette from the financial department has been absent from work regularly. Verify this and deduct half a month's salary accordingly."

Jeanette stared at Collen in disbelief. Her boyfriend, who used to shower her with affection, was now penalizing her.

With red eyes, she glared at Trevor and clenched her teeth, directing all her hatred towards him.

From now on, you are the one I despise the most! Just wait and see!

Little did she know that Dragon, the person she had loathed in the past, was actually the same person she now hated the most.

Unperturbed by their distress, Trevor paid no attention to them and entered the company with ease.

Collen, fixated on Trevor's departing figure, now held even more intense animosity towards him than Jeanette did.

He was determined to destroy the other man.

As Trevor left, Collen took out his phone again and sent a message to Jonah, inquiring about the progress of their plan.

Jonah replied promptly, "Mr. Singh, I've arranged a skilled hitman. There should be some positive news today. But they demanded an exorbitant price of ten million dollars!"

Collen was taken aback.

"What? How dare they ask for ten million dollars just to murder someone? It's like they're robbing a bank!"

Jonah called Collen and explained that there was little they could do about the price.

Collen gritted his teeth and declared, "Ten million is fine! Just make sure to get the job done!"

Of course, Trevor remained unaware of the unfolding situation. But even if he knew, he wouldn't be concerned. He knew that Collen wouldn't succeed in killing him!

At that moment, Trevor was in conversation with Mateo, and he received crucial information.

Despite Tucker's prolonged 'disappearance,' the family trust fund had continuously held the majority of shares in the Group.

This included almost all the shares of the subsidiaries, effectively making him the largest shareholder of the Singh Group!

Moreover, Tucker had prepared a will.

If Collen could demonstrate his competence, he would inherit all the shares under Tucker's name, leading to Collen assuming the CEO position.

Trevor furrowed his brow, feeling puzzled. He wondered why this seemed so odd. Could Tucker still be alive? Such a detailed and elaborate plan didn't appear to be the work of someone who died in an accident!

After contemplating the situation with a serious expression, Trevor instructed Mateo, "Keep a close eye on Collen during this period and make things difficult for him. In particular, ensure he doesn't demolish the orphanage to build an amusement park there!"

Mateo nodded repeatedly. He was well aware that the man before him was not just a major shareholder of the Singh Group but also the leader of a certain crime organization!

A glint of determination flickered in Trevor's eyes. He thought if Tucker was indeed alive, he would find a way to draw him out!
