

Chapter 1782 He Is Still Alive!

Trevor squinted slightly.

He was fully aware that Tucker was a renowned business legend in Zayden and a master of the stock market.

If Trevor continued to engage in a direct battle for control of the Singh Group through shares, it would likely yield no benefit for Trevor.

Having come to this realization, Trevor decided against tangling with Tucker in that regard and resolved to find a new approach.

Even if he couldn't take over the entire Singh Group, he was determined to handle the crafty Tucker in his own way.

With a glint of determination in his eyes, Trevor instructed Mateo, "Stop bothering with Collen. Instead, push him to expedite the development of the amusement park project! I'll take care of the demolishing. You just follow my lead!"

Confused, Mateo furrowed his brow.

He asked, "Why? If Collen successfully wins the amusement park project, he'll become the CEO! Even the shares currently held by the trust fund will be his, and he'll become the chairman!"

Trevor smiled mysteriously, choosing not to elaborate but reassured, "Don't worry, just do as I say. Collen won't get what he wants. Don't you trust me?"

Reluctant to press further, Mateo nodded silently, accepting Trevor's directive.

Meanwhile, Trevor shared a low voice with Mateo, instructing him to prepare for dealing with Tucker in another manner.

After giving instructions to Mateo, Trevor left the company and headed to the orphanage. He intended to meet with the director and explain that the orphanage was going to be demolished.

Trevor had previously promised a positive outcome.

Now, he had to provide an explanation for the impending demolition.

Meanwhile, at the police station, Collen remained silent, and the police were unable to convict him at the moment.

In a moment of desperation, Collen contacted Jonah and urgently demanded, "Something happened. Bring money to the municipal police station to bail me out!"

Jonah received the call calmly, offering a smile as he replied, "Mr. Singh, I apologize, but I've received an urgent and mysterious assignment. I'll bail you out once it's done! Rest assured, when I finish this task, I'll give you a surprise!"

Without giving Collen a chance to respond, Jonah promptly ended the call, leaving Collen astonished and doubtful.

He cursed, "What a real traitor!"

On the other side, Jonah felt excited.

Before Collen contacted him, he had already received another call from none other than Tucker himself.

To Jonah's surprise, Tucker was alive!

Moreover, Tucker had a specific order for Jonah.

"Go to the orphanage and create chaos, secure the land, and assist Collen in becoming the CEO of the Singh Group. I'll give you five million dollars as a downpayment. When you finish it, I'll give you twenty million dollars more!"

Twenty million dollars!

Tucker's offer left Jonah both elated and disoriented.

Never before had he seen such a colossal sum of money since leaving the Severich company.

However, despite receiving the initial five million dollars, he refrained from hiring any men.

Instead, he chose to bribe an acquaintance who happened to be a policeman, hoping for cooperation in demolishing the orphanage.

Jonah's face transformed into a ferocious expression as he pondered Tucker was far more generous than his grandson. Twenty million dollars!

He promised it so casually!

Jonah vowed to showcase his abilities. He would have that old orphanage scoundrel thrown behind bars, demolish the place by force, and then bail out Collen.

With such accomplishments, the Singh Group would undoubtedly recognize his value.

Unaware of Jonah's sinister plans, Trevor was en route to the orphanage.
