

Chapter 1795 Tucker's Return

Collen, who had been in high spirits, erupted in fury upon hearing the devastating news from Jeanette.

"What the hell are you talking about? I just acquired Raven's shares. The Group is supposed to be mine now. Are you telling me it's all going to fall apart?" he snapped.

Jeanette, facing Collen's anger, became more flustered and stammered, "There's almost no money left in the Group's account! Most of it was transferred to other companies through various channels of cooperation. The orphanage project has been shut down! If we can't raise the funds, the construction can't continue!"

In disbelief, Collen snatched the financial statements from Jeanette's hand and examined them with wide eyes.

Staring at the meager amount of money displayed, Collen staggered back a few steps and collapsed to the floor.

Feeling dizzy and distraught, he screamed, "Why? Why did the Singh Group end up like this right after I took over? Where is the money?"

Collen's anger couldn't be contained with mere words. He pounded the floor in frustration.

Suddenly, Collen jumped up, slapped Jeanette across the face, and angrily demanded, "There's something wrong with the finances. Why didn't you report this earlier? Tell me!"

Jeanette winced from the burning pain on her cheek after the slap.

Feeling unjustly accused, Jeanette responded tearfully, "I've been busy dealing with the embezzlement of company funds recently, so I haven't been in the right frame of mind to focus on these matters. If you hadn't pledged some of your assets to the private bank of the Sanderson family today, I wouldn't have noticed the suspicious funds!"

Overwhelmed and on the verge of fainting, Collen let out a loud scream.

Just then, another roar echoed from the office, and a figure appeared—Tucker!

At this point, Tucker could no longer remain composed.

If he continued to hide, the Singh Group would be completely ruined!

Collen, on the brink of collapse, was shocked to see his grandfather appear before him once more.

He rubbed his eyes vigorously, staring at Tucker with wide-open eyes, and murmured, "Grandpa? Aren't you supposed to be dead?"

Enraged by his disappointing grandson, Tucker waved his crutch at Collen and scolded, "You worthless fool! You've destroyed everything I built! You've ruined my business empire! I'll beat you to death!"

Already on the edge of a breakdown, Collen completely fell apart after being scolded and physically attacked by his seemingly resurrected grandfather.

His eyes were bloodshot as he screamed madly, "You! You faked your death! You've been hiding behind the scenes, using me as your pawn! I am your grandson! Why are you always so suspicious and guarding against me?"

The two men became embroiled in a heated struggle.

Observing their tumultuous fight, Jeanette grew anxious and shouted, "Stop fighting! The company is going bankrupt!"

People passing by the office accidentally eavesdropped and began to panic.

As word of the situation spread through the company, terror ensued among the employees.

Meanwhile, Trevor learned of the news and smiled to himself.

Everything was going according to plan. Tucker was about to face the consequences!

Shortly after, Cheetah also received the news. He was shocked and muttered to himself, "What Raven said was true! A massive commercial empire went bankrupt like this!"

In that moment, Trevor called. Cheetah picked up the phone hurriedly, and Trevor issued his order.

"Hurry and seize the assets from the two Bat faction members. If there are any delays, don't blame me for taking action against you!"

Witnessing the collapse of the Singh Group, Cheetah dared not take it lightly and promptly pledged allegiance to Trevor's command.

Suddenly, Cheetah recalled his previous sneer and the bet he had made. Fearing Trevor's retribution, he sought to show loyalty and said respectfully, "Sir, I was blind not to recognize your true abilities. From now on, I will follow your lead!"

Trevor understood the reason for Cheetah's sudden change in attitude. He must have learned about the bankruptcy of the Singh Group.

Trevor didn't say a word. He simply smiled mischievously and hung up the phone.

Cheetah was filled with fear and anxiety, worried that Trevor wouldn't forgive him.