

Chapter 1875 Meeting Sally again

The goons circled Madison and her daughter and tried to manipulate them with insincere grins on their faces.

"Wouldn't it be great to study medicine for a big family in Clouauro? If you don't go there, we'll drop by every day and make sure you can't run your business," one of the hooligans said.

"That's right," another echoed. "Isn't Clouauro the ideal place to study medicine rather than settle here and open a clinic? Sometimes it's good to take advice from other people."

They kept pressing Madison and her daughter, hoping for that sweet reward if they could persuade the two to move to Clouauro.

However, the two were not having any of it. Fuming, they retorted, "We have every right to stay wherever we want. If you don't stop harassing us, we'll call the police!"

The main bully swaggered over and taunted, "Do it!"

Sally quickly reached for her phone to call the cops. But for some reason, she could not get through.

She stared daggers at him and spat, "It's you, isn't it?"

The man, instead of getting angry, burst into laughter. "Guilty as charged. But so what? I've jammed the signals. So, are you going to call the police again? Either head to Clouauro, or you're stuck here."

Sally's hackles rose. She locked eyes with him and, in sheer frustration, stamped her feet. Sadly for her, there was not much she could do.

Madison stepped forward and pulled her daughter to her side. "I've made myself clear. We're not leaving this clinic. You can hang around every day, but you're wasting your time. Just give up!"

However, the thugs persisted and threatened the two. "I'll ask you one more time. Go to Clouauro, or your clinic gets a makeover?"

In a fit of anger, Sally stepped forward and challenged, "Do it! I dare you. Let's see how far above the law you think you are."

With anger evident on their faces, the hooligans exchanged glances at one another, seemingly ready to follow through on their threats.

But, right at that moment...

"Stop!" Trevor made his timely entrance. After giving Madison and Sally a reassuring nod, he faced the thugs and scolded them, "Fuck off! Who said you could make trouble here?"

The main bully sized up Trevor, smirked at Madison, and teased, "Who's this? Your backup? You really think some young buck can handle us? I bet he'll be trembling like a leaf in fear once things get real."

The group broke into raucous laughter and paid no mind to Trevor.

Trevor had had enough and glanced at the mob.

Without warning, he threw a punch to the hooligan in front of him, sending him sprawling to the ground, and then warned, "If you don't get out of my sight, you'll be crawling out!"

The thugs were unmoved. They closed in on Trevor and spread out to surround him.

"Fuck you!" one of them spat. "How dare you attack us? You're courting death!"

Yet, they were no match for Trevor, who kicked each one and sent them flying.

Only when they realized Trevor's fighting prowess did they back off. Clutching their injuries, they finally ran off.

"You think you can guard them forever? I'm sure you can't afford to offend the ones behind us!" one of the thugs said before leaving.

Trevor merely snorted in response and then turned to Madison. "Are you okay? I was trying to reach you, but I couldn't. It turned out that something happened. Good thing I came just in time."

Madison looked at him with confusion written all over her face. "Who exactly are you?"

Realizing he was still Raven, he answered, "It's me, Trevor!"

"Trevor?" Sally's eyes lit up in delight as she exclaimed, "It's really you!"

She reached out to hug him. But noticing Luisa behind him, she withdrew her hand awkwardly.

As an observant person, Madison glanced at Luisa and connected the dots.

"Why are you here for us?" she asked with a frown.

Trevor let out a sigh and filled Madison in on the situation. "Please save Luisa!"
