

Chapter 1894 A Father's Love

Connie ended the call with the Fire Gang, whom she had hired to cripple Trevor's hands.

Her lips curled into a cold sneer at the thought of the tragedy awaiting Trevor.

"So you're an excellent doctor? Let's see how far your arrogance can go if I cripple your hands!" Connie hissed sarcastically through gritted teeth.

Meanwhile, at the Archers' residence, Trevor opened the door to Braden's friendly smile.

Relieved that Trevor entertained his visit, Braden warmly greeted, "Did you just come back from the party? I heard about the accident and Connie's involvement. I'm here to apologize on her behalf."

Trevor knitted his brows, surprised to see Braden at his door, acting all cordial.

Why was he apologizing on Connie's behalf instead of blaming him for the accident? Had Braden always been considerate?

Returning his cordiality, Trevor said, "It's okay. I was at fault, too. I shouldn't have argued with her, but what's done is done. The important thing now is she's safe."

Braden responded with a slight bob of his head, suddenly looking uneasy.

With a low voice, he said, "I also heard you performed first-aid on Ewing and prevented his injuries from worsening. I must say I'm impressed by your medical skills, Trevor. You have exceptional talent. Ronald wasn't wrong about you."

He lowered his eyes and continued, "To be honest, I didn't come here only to apologize on Connie's behalf but also to ask for your help. I want you to treat my son."

At the mention of his son, Braden's expression darkened. He drew a heavy sigh before adding, "Jeffrey is my only son. He was a talented kid, full of life, and had big dreams. He was perfect in every way, the future heir to our family. But an unfortunate night turned his life upside down."

His eyes darkened as he continued, "A few years ago, he was walking along a dark alley when he saw a group of thugs harassing a girl. Being the kind boy he was, he stepped in to help the girl. But those bastards assaulted him even though he yielded no weapon. He sustained multiple stab wounds and almost lost his life. My world crumbled when I heard the news. In my desperation, I called in the most excellent doctors in Clouauro to save him. Fortunately, he survived, but his injuries were so severe that they left him partially paralyzed. Since then, his attitude significantly changed. He became depressed and listless, so different from the carefree kid he once were."

He then pleaded with Trevor, "I would do everything to bring his liveliness back, so I plucked up the courage to ask for your help, Trevor. I believe your abilities can cure my son, and in turn, restore his love for life and himself. My family will be forever indebted to you if you just help my son."

As he spoke, Braden held back the tears that threatened to come out of his eyes.

At that moment, he wasn't the invincible patriarch of the powerful Archer family but a despondent father over his beloved child's situation.

Trevor and Luisa were moved not only by Jeffry's heroism but also by Braden's show of love to his son.

Nodding lightly, Trevor finally said, "I'll see what I can help."

Braden's face immediately lit up. He looked up at Trevor and exclaimed, "Thank you so much, Trevor! Come and I'll take you to see Jeffry."

At last, his son would get the help he needed. Braden had almost lost hope, but Trevor gave him another reason to hold on for his son.

Braden led Trevor and Luisa to Jeffry's room.

A doctor was already inside, checking on Jeffry.

To avoid misunderstanding, Braden immediately explained the situation.

Weston Martinez, the doctor, frowned. With unconcealed displeasure over Trevor's presence, he posited, "Excuse my rudeness, sir, but I don't see the need for another doctor. I'm a renowned doctor in my field of expertise, and I believe my knowledge and skills are enough to give Mr. Archer the treatment he needs to recover."

Trevor sneered inwardly at Weston's words.

< Chapter 1894 A Father's Love

 +120 Points at most

A renowned doctor? Wasn't he going too far?

As far as Trevor knew, the Craig family were on the hunt for the most renowned and excellent doctors all over the world to join their biopharmaceutical company.

If Weston were truly renowned as he claimed to be, he should have been recruited by the Craig family. But he was still here, working as a private doctor to Jeffry.

Recommended for you