

Sorry My Love Affects Your Love For Others Chapter 14

That day, I didn't know when he left.

After that, he never appeared in my life again.

Until five months later, when Sophie stopped me at my door.

Even though she wore a loose dress, it couldn't hide her visibly pregnant belly.

She was carrying Ethan's child and demanded to know where he was.

Ethan's parents denied that the baby was their grandchild.

She had no job and was on the brink of destitution.

I never inquired about Ethan's income, but I knew he had been giving most of his money to Sophie. Believing me when I said I genuinely didn't know where Ethan was, she shed tears and begged me to lend her five thousand dollars for an abortion..

This child seemed even more pitiful than I was.

I couldn't give her money, but I handed over the engagement ring Ethan left behind.

At least it was worth more than five thousand.

Later, I heard from Ethan's friends that he had gone to a remote area to do charity work and teach, with no plans to return.

Slowly, I began to move on from those gloomy days.

Work was going well, and I felt mentally and physically at ease, able to sleep without relying on sleeping pills.

Everything was heading in a positive direction.

For the rest of my life, I would be truly happy.
