“Oh no! I should have known this is what he meant when he asked me not to look for him.” I felt like breaking down right before them.

1 Month Later:

We searched for him every day but couldn't find him: It was pretty clear he didn't want to be found. Slowly, everybody's lives were back to normal except for mine. I couldn't bring myself to stop thinking about Thiago..

I didn't stop my research, but this time the topic changed. Instead of looking for any more information on the Lycans, I was searching for the Mother Witch.

"If we can meet her, I can ask her about the witch that cast this horrendous curse on Thiago," I spoke to myself. The water from my wet hair was falling on my shoulders as I had just taken a shower after having sex with Lazlo. Everybody had fallen asleep, but I couldn't sleep. I don't know how many restless nights had gone by that I didn't sleep properly.

"Enya!" I heard Lazlo wake up and stare at me. I was so focused on my laptop's screen that I didn't even see him for the first few minutes.

"Enya! You need to rest," He got up from his bed and crawled into my bed behind me.

"Do you think I should reach out to Oswin again?" I asked Lazlo, who shrugged his shoulders.

"I don't know. It seems like a suicide plan to me. They took your blood so that they could find out if you have your mother's powers. Now, why would you walk straight to them when we know they hold evil intents for you?" Lazlo was

"Hey, it's been some time, eh?" Corbin walked inside, dropping his bag on the side and then stretching his neck and arms to show us how comfortable he was even when he was getting punished.

"What are you here for?" I couldn't stand there like the others and not question him. Whatever reasons brought him here were going to get me fucked up. I remember we didn't have a good last conversation, so his coming here again was just not a good sign. Especially when I wanted to give my all to finding Thiago.

"Ride!" Moana rolled her eyes. "You shouldn't be talking to him like that. He is my boyfriend and the alpha king." She continued to talk and kill my last brain cells. The last thing I wanted was for some fake couple to pretend like they didn't have other intentions when living in this room with us.

"It is okay, babe. I guess she is still not over the phase when everybody wanted her." Corbin winked at Moana to calm her down before he straightened his back and looked my way.

"Ah! I can't believe I am going to say this, but I did not miss you at all," Corbin commented. I rolled my eyes and sighed in response to his nonsense.

"Tell me why you are here?" I asked him again, and he wrapped his arm around Moana to pull her closer to his chest.

"I got caught fucking a beautiful witch," he pouted, pointing at Moana, who looked super proud of herself.

"That is nonsense. No way your father didn't save you from this punishment. So why don't you tell us what you are here for?" I proceeded to ask, and weirdly enough, none of my Corbin and Moana were the last ones to come in. And once everybody was ready to change, I approached Corbin. I noticed Lazlo trying to get my attention and trying to ask me what I was doing, but my mind was stuck in my diary.

"Where is it?" I asked, standing in front of him while he was sitting on Moana's bed and hunching over to take off his shoes.

"Where is what?" he sounded tired when questioning me. I didn't get to stick around when he was roaming around school, acting all sassy and arrogant. I heard from everyone that he had already messed with everyone on the first day of school.

"What you are looking for is not yours," Moana commented from beside him. She was trying to annoy me, I get it.

"Corbin! Where is my diary?" I was more specific this time, but he looked even more confused. I knew he was acting. If he didn't steal it, then maybe he asked Moana to do it. Either of them did it.

“What? What diary?” He straightened his back but didn’t get up from the bed.

“I am not in the mood for games. Give me my diary back,” I was ready to pounce. I could hear my jaw pop, and I am sure others heard it, too.

It’s been two days, and life has turned into a nightmare. Corbin was just a walking mess. Ever since he came, he has turned our lives into a living hell. Although I wanted to turn him into a bagel, I didn’t argue with him again. I didn’t find my diary, and that had been bothering me a lot lately.

“Guys! I think we need to take her seriously,” Christina mumbled. They had been standing around me for about an hour, and nobody said a word. After returning from school, I just sat in my bed with my face in my hands. Corbin and Moana weren’t in the room; hence, we were able to breathe peacefully.

“We are taking her seriously. We just don’t think it’s a good idea to argue with Corbin over little things. He is much more powerful than us. By that, I definitely mean he has more authority than any of us. He can cuff her with that bracelet, and then what? She will be miserable.” The moment Lazlo said that I freed my face from my hands and raised my head to look at him.

My hands were holding onto this photo frame of Enya’s family. It was her, her father, and her mother. I heard Enya talk to Maynard and Christina, probably remembering some memory, but I couldn’t get my eyes off of her mother’s face.

She seemed too familiar.

‘Laz! What is going on?’ I thought maybe I should ask my wolf.

‘I don’t know. I just feel very weird. It is as if a memory inside you is causing this pain. It is so strong that even I am feeling it.’ Laz answered. I understood it wasn’t him, but something in me felt weird.

‘It just feels weird. As if something— or maybe a memory is trying to wake up,’ Laz explained. I kept staring and staring until I realized where I had seen her.

‘Laz!’ my throat felt dry when making a word. ‘I remember her. She is— she is the one who used to send those cursed potions to my dad to feed me. I remember they used to be so painful. She was so reckless and didn’t even care how her potions were hurting a little child,’ I yammered everything to Laz while he listened to me silently.

That memory of my childhood is the reason I'd been in pain for so long. After she died, the potions stopped, and I could finally function like a normal Alpha. Maybe not a regular, normal alpha, because how do I tell if I even got better or just hid the pain inside and pretended to be fine?

'She was our mate's mother?' Laz seemed shocked, too.

347-The Witch Who Cursed Him

After Christina left to check on Lazlo, I was left alone with Maynard. Ever since I stepped into this home, I was feeling like negative energy has succumbed to me.

"He will be fine," Maynard whispered when watching me stare at the empty spot Lazlo had left.

"I think I shouldn't have brought him here. He must be missing his mother," I whispered sadly. It hurt me to see him so upset.

“Am I the only one who doesn’t miss his mother?” he joked, trying to cheer me up. I passed him a weak smile to re assure him I am fine. It was time I start looking hard but then I realized I needed to thank him for wasting his time and ener gy on helping me.

“Thank you for everything,” I told him, feeling a bit distant from him. It was crazy how I stopped thinking about him and me after Thiago left. I wasn’t having crazy thoughts about Maynard but I always saw him with Christina and asked my self why he was so brutal to me when we were in a relation ship. But that complaint withered away. Thiago took away a lot more than just my mate when he left.

“Of course, Enya, I will never leave your side,” he smiled and the moment he deepened his eye contact with me, I felt weird. He was looking me in the eye for a moment before he tried to tug a few strands of my hair behind my ear. That’s when I pulled away from him. The look on his face told me he didn’t expect that.

He almost looked shocked as if something very unpre dictable happened.

“I think we shouldn’t be acting like that around each other anymore,” | whispered but instead of saying he wasn’t mean ing to do anything, he just looked away. The frown on his forehead stunned me too. Was he really annoyed that I didn’t give in to his sweet gestures or was he feeling guilty? Maybe we will never know because I didn’t feel like discussing us with him.

There were no us anymore.

I looked away from him and then looked around to find clues. It was not easy roaming around and not spotting some thing that pull me back to my childhood days. That’s when my eyes picked out the sight of a colored door.

348-Suffering Silently

When I saw the woman cursing Thiago, the moment I remembered that hidden memory and why I had dreamed about the woman cursing Thiago, my heart sank in my chest. I couldn't even utter a word or walk inside the room to inspect it.

"Wow! That's a weird color," Maynard said, walking past me to enter the room and then looking around. "There is nothing here. But why is the color so red, and what is all this marking on the floor?" he frowned, probably confused at what kind of messed up work my mother was doing here.

That day, tears in my eyes, my vision was blurred, and my body was shivering in guilt. It was my mother who cursed Thiago, but for what?

Why would someone curse a little child? I couldn't comprehend how my mother could be this evil. As I raised my face and blinked the tears away, I saw Maynard walk around the room cluelessly. He had no clue my mother screwed him over, too.

At this point, I wouldn't be surprised if my mother had done something for Zander to turn out like that. Is it why I was given so many mates? Did she mess up everyone and then the Moon Goddess gave me them as a mate to punish me? Maybe it is a redemption point where I have to help my mates?

"Enya!" Maynard spoke to get my attention. "Here is a picture—," he was looking through the closet when I shook my head and started walking backward. I wanted to get out of here and leave as fast as I could.

"Um! What is happening to you?" He must have seen me cry, because he ran after me out of the room to check on me. I shook my head one last time before I turned around and sprinted out of the room like crazy. He followed me, and once I was in the front yard, I broke down.

"What is going on? Did something happen?" He wrapped his arms around me and pulled me closer to his chest as I cried frantically.

"Shit!" Lazlo instantly covered his face in his hands and mumbled some cursed words at the situation. I was now standing in front of them with my shoulders raised and my face dug down.

"I am so sorry!" | whispered, almost breaking down once again. That's when Christina got up from her spit and ap proached me to wrap her arms around my body to comfort me.

"It is not like you did it. You were just a baby when it all took place," she heard me tell them all about the red room and how my mother was cursing everyone around. I didn't say the names because I knew Maynard would return to his pack soon and will find out all about it from his mother. I wonder if is that why his mother didn't like me in the beginning. And maybe she later accepted me after she realized I have a lot of powers?

"Thank you," I told Christina, but the others were awfully silent.

"What about the—sacrifice?" Maynard whispered. Obviously, they were all having that question in their mind. They wanted to know how I feel about the whole sacrifice thing now.
