Chapter 391

391 -A Portal To The Other Side

“Because you loved the powers. We wanted to see if you got them and how much you’re obsessed with them.” She grimaced, looking at the wall on the side.

“Obsessed with something that I thought was mine? I’m sorry, but you’ve never questioned an alpha’s obsession with his strength, have you? You are a mother witch, and I am assuming you are also very powerful. Is it a crime to hold powers?” I argued with her for judging me when I didn’t even know how my mother got these powers. I wasn’t the one who asked for them. I grew up with my wolf and thought that was all I had. I never expected more.

“How do we stop this?” I asked her, deciding to change the subject and panicking at the worst, which was yet to happen. The moment these witches scatter around; Moana will use them to get rid of whoever pisses her off. The world will turn into turmoil.

“Open the portal and send them back,” she whispered confidently.

“Opened the portal?” I grimaced alongside Lazio, who was looking confused too.

“Portal between living and dead. They are sticking with Moana, so you must throw her in the portal,” she explained, but she still couldn’t convince me how it was possible.

“Open a portal? You are asking if it is as easy as opening a door to any bedroom.” I complained about the lack of information from her.

“It is possible with your help. You are not like us, Enya. You are way more than any of us, but there is a catch,” she said, then lowered rubbing her palms nervously.

I was still reciting because the moment I stop; the portal will be gone. Moana was getting dragged by the forceful wind, yet she was holding onto the door and shielding herself.

Just when the noises turned louder, I saw Thiago get up on his feet after getting tossed aside a few minutes ago. He turned to me and growled, his eyes showing a weird shimmer when looking at me.

I could almost see a human like Thiago in that lycan. A weak smile covered my lips as I tried to tell him that soon everything would be over and he would be back. Once Moana leaves, Thiago will be back.

Everything will be over then.

The witch got closer, while Moana had still not let go of the door. She attacked me, but Lazio pulled me aside, trying to buy time. I was still fighting to keep the portal open. Although I was still able to recite, my nose started bleeding due to using too much magic. My sight turned blurry, but I shook my head to keep my focus on Moana and the mission ahead.

That's when the unthinkable happened. I saw Thiago bolting in Moana's direction. She was so focused on me that she sent all her witches to attack me, leaving herself unshielded.

"NO!" I shouted through the phrase when Thiago approached her and grabbed her by the back.

"Save me, you morons!" Moana yelled for her witches. The pressure was too I could literally see portal.

It is very disappointing to announce that after so many years we find out Alpha King Shaun was the bastard who ra* and killed her and then went ahead and started rumors that compelled Alpha Shepard to end his life. If you think the brutality caused by this man ends here, then you are wrong. He then paid a witch to ruin alpha Shepard's son's life. I think it is pretty clear that he doesn't deserve the title of the alpha king, and neither does he deserve to live among us." The elder of the council had a disgusted look on his face whenever he looked at Shaun, who was badly injured and couldn't heal because they had injected a lot of silver and wolfbane into his system.

It's been two years since Thiago died, and, well, I didn't stop until I collected all the proof I could with the help of the vision on that night and the files I retrieved from my home and proved him guilty. He tried to escape the trial by lying and even threatening me, but with the help of the Royal Beta of Thiago's pack, I was able to catch him by his toe.

Now he was presented before the entire pack and looked all messed up.

394-1 Reject You Alpha King Corbin

I didn't look away even when Shaun kept shouting in pain and crying as they shot arrows at him. Corbin was also there. He had worn an enormous hat and glasses. I assume it was to cover his eyes. He must be crying for his father.

That's the thing. No matter what they do, there is a part of us that cries when we watch our loved ones in pain. I did cry for my mother, but only because I was concerned about why she didn't take other people's feelings into consideration. I was upset that my mother turned out to be so evil.

From an outside perspective, it seemed like justice had been served. But something felt empty. It was the spot that was supposed to be filled with Thiago. He should have been here to witness his parent's murderer getting punished, but that chance got stolen away from him when Corbin let Moana into the academy.

"I know you will have nightmares, but I hope you can find peace now," Janet held my hand and walked me out of the ground.

After losing everything, I have become just a human among such powerful creatures. If I saw anything terrifying or if someone growled at me, I would have nightmares. Just like how a normal human would. Those went into extinction until I became one.

"Have a good night," I wished her, turning around and walking toward the road.

“What did you say?” Corbin shook his head as if he was not sure if he heard me correctly, but then he placed a hand on his chest as he felt the mate bond shaking.

“You rejected me?” he grimaced, tilting his head and fixing an angry glare on my face. I was hesitant and afraid of his reaction, but then the counselors started to walk out after sorting out everything for the night. I felt like it was my chance to leave.

“Alpha King Corbin. I know you must be hurting, but justice is what we cannot look away from,” the old man started having a word with him while he looked distracted. I could tell he was thinking of a million ways to kill the old man who was stopping him from coming after me.

I sprinted out of there and reached the bus stop in a few minutes. I was out of breath, panting, and breathing with difficulty. The instant the bus arrived, I climbed into it. It was odd that Lazio didn’t come to pick me up.

“Ah!” I sighed, holding a hand to my chest, and felt miserable. I hated it. I was not used to this life. Even when I didn’t have my powers, I used to fight and take a stand for myself. I knew back then that somehow I would survive, but it was completely different this time. If anything attacks me, I will not heal.

Thankfully, Corbin didn’t follow me, or maybe he lost my scent. I almost tripped when getting off the bus. I had a lot planned for the next day. Now that the trial the office with Lazio as his secretary, just like suggested.

“Lazio! I told you, he instigated me.” I answered him quietly. His eyes were glaring into my soul, making me vulnerable.

“He had seen his father die. What did you expect from him? You were supposed to use your brain in that situation,” he yelled again, slamming his hands on the desk once more.

I felt trapped in the cage of his eyes. He seemed to be judging me.

The curse was lifted, and all the spells that ruined their lives vanished too. They all should have been normal, but the only thing that changed was my condition.

“I have seen him die, too. I stood there watching the person die, while the person who should have been there to see that died because of me,” I murmured, pouring my heart out to Lazio. My lips quivered so miserably that for a moment, I felt bad, like I should have stayed stronger.

“What? Where did you get that from now?” He frowned as he questioned my statement.

“He said that to me. He claimed that I was the reason Thiago died. Now you see why I lost my temper with him?” I made a point, speaking in my mouth.

“That’s just bullshit. Enya! I was there when he made a decision to save your life and give up on his own.” Lazio shook his head when he reminded me of that horrible night.

"And this is the resting area for Lazio and me." Valerie said, pointing at a cozy joked because the room had a pretty good view. "Anything bothering you?" she asked when she finished showing me around.

I was a bit baffled, responding slowly and unreasonably. There were a few things that caught my eye, but I couldn't really tell what they were.

"You guys rest here?" I asked with a weak and awkward smile on my lips. I and lanterns around. It didn't seem like a normal room, something you will see in an office building. It looked like a honeymoon suite.

"Yeah! Why?" She tugged the strand of hair behind her ear and asked me. Her eyes were weird, too. I mean, they were gorgeous, but the way she would stare at me was as if she was looking down upon me. It could only be me and my insecurities making me think that way.

"Together?" I gave a nervous laugh, trying to make it sound like a joke.

"You know! You haven't even seen your office yet," she forced a huge smile across her lips when breaking the concentration from the room and walking me to the office she had prepared for me. She had talked about it nonstop.

When she reached the office and saw a big lock on the door, her smile faded.

“Why is there a lock here?” she frowned, talking to herself. My office was on the third floor with the other employees.

We returned home and followed the same schedule as every day. I changed and instantly got into the kitchen to cook dinner for us while he took a little rest and planned to leave for a run after dinner.

"How is the lasagna?" I asked him, watching him shove his mouth with a spoonful and not even waiting to swallow the previous bite.

"It's good," he answered, scrolling through his phone at the same time.

"I was thinking—," I cleared my throat, adjusting in the seat. The dining room was vast, with only the two of us in it. It always made me feel lonelier here because Lazio would barely talk about anything.

I have decided to make the first move and maybe try to connect. It's been so long since we have been awkward with each other.

"How about I take a run with you today?" I smiled, watching him swallow with difficulty and stare at my face in silence.

“You don’t have a wolf. You will not be able to keep up with me,” he whispered, trying to be careful with his words.

“I know, but what if I try hard and maybe someday she wakes up?” I rubbed my palms excitedly when talking about Nia. I have missed her a lot. It was because of her that I felt so lonely. When I had her, no matter what state I used to be in, I felt at ease. But now I didn’t have anyone to talk to.

"If you don't want to sleep with me, just let me know." He was screaming and

"It is not like that," I murmured, steadily lowering my head and calming myself down.

"Then what is the problem? Are you missing him again? Do you think about him when we are doing it?" His statement and aggressive tone made me raise my face and look at him in silence.

"No!" I shook my head, feeling cornered. I would never do that. That is “Let me go, and I will answer you,” I demanded, breaking the eye contact because staring into his empty eyes was painful.

“Answer me, and I will let you go.” He shook me again, making me close my eyes as I felt the pain of his nails piercing through my skin.

“What is going on between you and her?” I finally answered with my eyes closed, and when he didn’t respond or shake me, I opened my eyes and made my question even clearer for him. “Is there something going on between you and Valerie?”
