

Chapter 30 I Am Sorry. I Am Doing My Best.

"What do you mean?" Raymond looked at Tracy in shock, "Hilda's kidney? What are you talking about?"

Tracy laughed at him, "What am I talking about? Raymond, are you a man? When you and Hilda had a car accident with your kidney injured, you were in need of a kidney, don't you know?"

Seeing his confused face, the snort in Tracy's eyes became more obvious, "It seems that you really didn't know the fact that Hilda donated her kidney to you."

"No! It is not possible! Karen donated her kidney to me! Karen told me about this!"

"Karen?" Tracy looked at Raymond as if she was talking with the stupidest man in the world, "I had thought you were a smart person and it turned out that I was wrong!"

Not Karen?

It was not Karen who donated her kidney to him?

Back then, when Raymond woke up in the hospital after the car accident and forgot everything about Hilda. At that time, all the people around told him that Karen donated her kidney to him.

Karen's donation was one of the reasons why he hadn't dealt with the Miller family yet.

To him, the Miller family saved him and if it weren't for Karen's kidney, he would have died.

But what did Tracy just say?

Hilda...donated her kidney to her?

But she had a heart disease, didn't she?

How could she afford to lose a kidney?

"Tracy!" Raymond's head was in a mess now and he wanted to know about everything clearly.

Before he asked the question to Tracy, the door of the operating room was opened.

Both Tracy and Raymond froze.

Tracy pushed Raymond away and quickly ran to Edgar, asking him with a tired face and dry voice, "How...is she?"

Edgar leaned against the wall powerlessly and gradually collapsed on the cold ground.

He took off his mask and his face was very pale. He didn't dare to look at Tracy whose eyes filled with expectations, saying, "I am sorry...I am doing my best..."

The doctors indeed tried their best to rescue her for thirteen hours. Edgar tried his best to save her but he couldn't make her stay.

"You are lying!" Tracy grabbed Edgar's white coat with blood spots on it, asking, "You are lying! Hilda said to me that she would live to her eighty-eight years. She also said she wanted to travel to the Antarctic Pole and go to climb the highest mountain! She will not leave me! Hilda loves this world and how could she...leave me? So you are lying, right?"

Edgar's hand was still trembling and he repeated like a robot,

"I...am sorry."

Tracy fell to the ground suddenly and she gripped Edgar's arm, "I am begging you...tell me she is alive. Tell me you have saved him. Please tell me..."

Edgar stared at Tracy who burst into tears with empty eyes. There was nothing he could say except for 'I am sorry'. He finally had a taste of hating someone. Edgar now hated the man who stood in the corner without saying anything.

Edgar had been standing for thirteen hours and he lost all his might.

He was just sitting on the floor, looking at Raymond, "Before Hilda left, she woke up for a short time and left a message to you.

Raymond looked at Edgar without emotions in his eyes.

"Hilda said she had given it back to you and she didn't owe you anymore. But you own the Parker family which you are not able to pay back."

Chapter 31 Hilda, Stop Sleeping

What...did she give back to him?

Raymond stared at Edgar in a stupor and couldn't understand what he was saying.

Where is Hilda?

Where is Hilda...now?

"Edgar Robinson, where is she?" Raymond was in great pain all over his body and even his breath made his heart ache.

"She still in the operating room," as long as Edgar closed his eyes, he would recall her relieved face on the operating table as if she had been wanting to die, "By the way, I put the thing on the table which she said she gave back to you. You can go in to have a look."

The operating room...

Hilda was waiting for him in the operating room.

Raymond walked to the room step by step.

At this moment, Tracy who was sitting on the floor suddenly raised her head and said, "Raymond, you can't go in there. Hilda doesn't want to see you anymore. Don't go to bother her! Get off!"

Tracy got up and stopped Raymond in a loud voice but what she saw was that the room door was closed in front of her.

Raymond locked himself in the operating room and then stood at the door, watching the woman on the table who seemed to fall into a deep sleep...

He walked quietly toward her, afraid to wake her up. When he arrived in front of her, he said with his softest voice, "Hilda, stop sleeping."

There was no reaction from the woman on the table.

Raymond repressed his anxiety at the bottom of his heart and held her cold hand, "Are you cold? Don't worry. I will make you warm. Hilda, I am back and I have found out the truth. So can you wake up now? Please stop sleeping! If you keep sleeping, I am going to leave. Do you hear me?"

When they were little, she always called him Ray because she said he was special in her heart.

But later how could he forget about this?

How could he forget Kiki, the woman he loved so deeply?

"Kiki...I still haven't regained some part of my memory. I forgot a lot of things about us but you will not be angry with me, will you? You like me and why do you leave me?"

He was holding her cold body but when he saw the bloody heart on the operating table, Raymond uncovered the white cloth on her and stared fixedly at Hilda's chest.

Her wound was closed up.

But under her chest, it must be empty.

It must be very...very empty.

Is this what she gave back to him?

Raymond's expression suddenly changed, followed by his strong cough, which led to trembles and heartache.

Until he coughed up blood.

Raymond wiped his blood off the corners of his mouth but accidentally a drop of his blood fell on Hilda's face and he became quite nervous.

"Hilda, don't be angry with me! Please don't be angry! I will make you clean and do it carefully. I won't hurt you anymore..."

Raymond cleaned the blood on Hilda's face carefully and softly.

Bang!

The door was pushed open by someone outside.

Tracy rushed in first and she used all her force to push Raymond away, protecting Hilda behind her.

"Raymond, wait and see your retribution! I will let the Miller family pay for what you did! What Hilda had been through would be counted on Karen's family!" Tracy endured her pain and said with her teeth gritted, "You are going to protect them, right? Then you'd better be careful!"