

Chapter 14 It Took Only One Night To Destroy It

When they arrived at the factory, they first checked all the monitors.

But they didn't find any suspicious people or suspicious behavior.

After checking the factory for several days, there was no progress.

Susan had no choice but to tell her subordinates to continue the observation. Then she stayed in the factory laboratory and began to test the lipstick given by the police.

She learned traditional Chinese medicine. These basic tests were not difficult for her.

But no matter how many times she compared the result, it showed that this lipstick was not poisonous.

After several days of hard work, she was a little prostrate at the moment.

Nothing was found, which made her helpless.

Lying on the table, her eyes closed heavily.

If this continued, then... This brand was going to be destroyed in her hands.

It was difficult to establish a brand, but it took only one night to destroy it.

What was Susan going to do?

Albert did not take care of her. Every day, her assistant would say that there was trouble at the company's gate.

She didn't know what to do next.

Susan drove the car and wander the street.

Her mind was full of troubles and she was a little absent-minded.

The consequence of being absent-minded was that she accidentally hit a car.

Her heart suddenly startled, hurried out of the car, came to the front car, and said politely, "I'm sorry. Are you okay? I'll pay for the repair."

The window came down slowly, and Aaron's warm face showed up.

Seeing Susan, he smiled, "My car is parked here. Well, you should hit it."

Susan was embarrassed. She looked around and found that this was the gate of her company.

Now it was dark and there were few people.

"Sorry, I was a little distracted."

Aaron opened the door and got off. "It's not safe to be distracted when you are driving."

"I know... I'll pay attention next time..."

Perhaps it was the irregular life in recent days. At that moment, her stomach began to ache violently.

Bending over and squatting on the ground, she covered her stomach and couldn't even say a word.

Aaron looked at her for a while, squatted in front of her, and asked, "Are you okay?"

Before Susan was about to speak, she passed out directly.

Aaron frowned. "Hey, what's the matter with you?"

He shook her a few times but she didn't wake up.

He had to hold her up and send her to the hospital.

But halfway, Susan woke up, looking at the colorful lights outside the window, and caught a glimpse of the man driving.

His side face fell into her eyes and was inexplicably familiar.

Seeing that the car was driving fast, she thought he was taking her to the hospital.

She didn't even take medicine these days. Anyway, she was a dying person. Let it be her fate.

"I'm just too tired. I don't have to go to the hospital. Just find a hotel."

Aaron glanced at her slightly, "Don't you go home?"

"I don't want to go home."

Aaron turned at the intersection and smiled, "I heard that you have a bad relationship with Albert. Is it true?"

Susan didn't speak. She didn't think it necessary to tell a stranger about these things.

And Aaron didn't continue to ask.

Susan looked at him, "Why are you at my company's gate?"

"I think it's pity, so I came to look at it."

After all, he had the intention to cooperate with Laura. When this event happened suddenly, even an outsider thinks it was a pity.

Thinking of this, she smiled astringently, "I can't run a company."

Aaron looked at her beautiful and gentle eyebrows from the inverted rear view, and his eyebrows wrinkled.

Although she painted the makeup of strong women, it still couldn't hide her weakness.

He said, "I can help you."

Susan looked at him, "Huh?"

"If you divorce Albert and marry me instead, I will make your company prosperous."

She thought he would have some way to help her, but it was a joke.

"President Aaron, I'm a married woman. I'm flattered that you should spend so much."

Aaron smiled, "I meant it."

"No, I'm a little sleepy. Wake me up when we arrive at the hotel."

"OK."

The car stopped at the door of his hotel. The woman beside her slept very heavily. He reached out and patted her face. She didn't wake up.

Aaron was exhausted, so he didn't wake her up.

He took her out of the car and walked into the hotel.

Susan didn't wake up until the next morning.

Looking around, she found that she was weak. She slowly began to recall what happened yesterday in her mind.

She should be in the hotel now.....

"Awake?"

Opening her eyes and sitting up, Susan saw Aaron.

Aaron noticed her panic. He smiled, "You slept too heavily yesterday, so I brought you directly to my suite. Don't worry. This is the presidential suite. I slept in another room."

Susan blushed and nodded.

"Get up and have breakfast."

Then Aaron left. Susan got up and washed her face, weak and dizzy.

Just washing her face wasted her great energy.

She came out with her hands on the wall and her head was very uncomfortable.

Aaron saw something wrong with her, and walked over, "Are you okay? Why is your face so red?"

Susan shook her head. Her voice was very dumb, "It's all right."

Aaron reached out to touch her forehead, "You have a fever! Why don't tell me before?"

Since her parents died, all her sadness and pain had been buried in her heart, because no one would care about her.

So she never told anyone when she was ill.

She thought she knew her body like the back of her hand, but she couldn't think that she would get gastric cancer, an advanced stage that couldn't be treated.

Thinking of this, her nose was sour. As soon as she wanted to say something, Aaron directly held her up.

"You'd better go to the hospital first."

"But I"

"Let other things go first. Your body is the most important."
