

Never Say 348

“Come on, Hannah, you haven’t missed today’s Twitter frenzy, have you?”

You’re like a natural-born star. Even without stepping into showbiz, you manage to stir the pot there,” Lydia remarked.

Scrolling through the trending topics on her tablet, Hannah Laughed, “Being a star is not in my cards. I don’t want to live under the constant scrutiny that comes with fame.”

“So, with all this online uproar, you’re not planning to make any statement?”

“Why bother? An explanation from me now would lack any credibility.”

True to Hannah’s words, her Twitter was flooded with people demanding answers.

For the time being, the movie’s directors and cast chose to remain quiet.

Out of nowhere, Eulalia tweeted an overly apologetic message.

“I’m truly sorry for letting everyone down. I gave my all for this minor role but fell short in the end. I invested endless nights trying to connect with the script, but life is unpredictable. I apologize once more for disappointing my fans and the viewers. Let’s not jump to conclusions based on someone else’s Twitter. I trust that everything unfolded as it was meant to. Special thanks to the director for the audition and to my fellow actors. Let’s put this issue to rest and not harm others. Thank you again!

This tweet seemed to point fingers not only at Hannah but also threw shade at the entire team involved in the film.

The comments section under Eulalia’s tweet quickly filled with harsh criticisms targeting both Hannah and the film crew, interspersed with words of sympathy for Eulalia.

“Is the director even a decent human being? She’s talented and so kind. Is she being neglected because she doesn’t have influential connections?”

“She’s truly generous, and she took the time to issue a statement to represent their side of the story! We need to boycott Cloud Voyager Saga. This film doesn’t deserve our attention!”

“What does that favored actress offer other than good looks? Talent?”

The industry has enough eye candy as it is. Beauty alone won’t get you far!”

“Don’t just blame the women. Are your darling male actors totally blameless?”

“Why drag Pierson into this? He’s merely an actor. He can’t dictate who gets cast. Let’s not go overboard, people!”

Suddenly, the online narrative shifted, targeting Hannah even more vehemently.

“Big news, everyone! Evidence shows Hannah plagiarized her graduation thesis! Everyone, this blogger has the receipts!”

Immediately, a swarm of users flooded the comment section of the blogger's post, eager to witness the unfolding scandal.

"Can you believe her? Copying a student's thesis, that's just shameless!"

"Thinking she can break into showbiz? She's barely on the doorstep and already risks getting kicked out."

As Hannah ate her lunch, she noted the escalating Twitter frenzy, akin to a raging storm, but her emotions remained steady.

The WhatsApp call remained active.
