

Night Stand 111

Chapter 111

“Matthew, did you just hear something?”

Ada’s voice was soft yet somewhat eerie, like a ghost. Her voice seemed to trigger the deepest fear in Matthew’s heart, making him pale, start sweating, and even almost faint.

He just shook his head.

Ada raised her hand and touched him on the head, and said, “Very good, good boy. You really didn’t hear anything just now. If you tell your dad the real cause of your sickness, I’d be mad. If you make me angry, you know what I’ll do to you.”

She ran her hand over Matthew’s head, causing him to shudder in horror. He was so shocked that tears almost fell from his eyes, and at that moment, it was as if he remembered something that had happened a long time ago. His eyes widened, and he opened his mouth several times but couldn’t make a sound.

Ada seemed to be satisfied with his frightened expression. She looked at the weak creature, sneered disdainfully, and said, “Don’t worry, little Matthew. If I become your mommy, I will be good to you. Don’t be afraid.”

After leaving work that afternoon, Wayne immediately went to the hospital to discharge Matthew and take him home. Ada, who had been at the hospital with Matthew all day, also got in the car.

“The doctor said Matthew’s digestive system is not good. So, he can’t eat at some small restaurants with low hygiene standard.” Ada’s voice echoed in the car.

Lying in Wayne’s arms, Matthew secretly clenched his tiny fists but did not dare to speak.

Wayne nodded his head and said politely, “I know. Thank you.” “It’s okay. I really like Matthew, and I’d be sad if he gets sick.” Wayne listened to her absentmindedly and kept looking out the window.

After he said some unpleasant words to Anna in the morning, she didn’t come back to the hospital anymore. He thought maybe he had been too mean to her.

Two days later, it was Saturday. Wayne stayed at home to take care of Matthew.

Matthew had stopped throwing up and having diarrhea, but he was still suffering from a fever. Therefore, Wayne did not let him go out but rest at home.

Matthew was an energetic child. Even though he was sick, he kept begging Wayne to take him to visit Anna and Tammy. When Matthew first said this, Wayne didn’t care.

Later, because Matthew had said it too many times, Wayne had trouble sleeping at night and had insomnia for several days,

The car was driving under the hot July sun. Tammy kept talking, and it took about ten minutes to finish the story.

“That’s it. My mother will be very sad every time she mentions this, so please don’t ask her about it.”

Ryan rested his elbow on the car window frame, one hand on his chin, and asked thoughtfully, "You said your brother disappeared shortly after you were born? Did he disappear in this place? Didn't you grow up abroad?"

Tammy blinked and said, justified, "I did grow up abroad." Ryan smiled and said, "What about your dad? Didn't he look for your brother?"

"I don't know, I don't see my daddy very often." Tammy shrugged with a look of innocence on her face.

"You don't see your daddy much?"

"Yes, he is very busy. I've seen him very few times, and we haven't seen each other this year. I don't even remember what he looks like."

"Why did your daddy divorce your mommy? Is it because he does not like you?" Ryan suddenly approached Tammy with a curious face, gossiping.

Tammy shrugged her shoulders helplessly and said, "Who said my mommy and daddy divorced? My daddy likes me a lot, he brings me a lot of gifts every time he sees me. I don't really like those things, but they're expensive."

Ryan's eyes widened as he heard the big gossip and asked, "They're not divorced? Then why do you want Wayne and your mommy to be together?"

Tammy said bluntly, "I like him and want him to be my daddy, and my mommy and daddy rarely see each other anyway. I see that my mommy and Uncle Wayne get along well."

Ryan nodded, stunned by her logic.

Wayne knocked on the door and went into Matthew's room. Matthew was sitting by himself on his bed, holding a box of snacks and lost in thought. He saw Wayne coming and immediately acted as if he was not welcome.

The room full of roses and the words of apology on the card made her feel better. But, when she calmed down and sat down, she was still feeling worried.

Through her time with Wayne, Anna found that he was not as indifferent as he seemed. He was a responsible man, both towards the women around him and the children. However, this was not why she could let him take care of Matthew just like that.

She had been in touch with the hospital doctor because she was worried about Matthew. When she learned that his vomiting and diarrhea were not caused by food poisoning but by fever, she was not only not relieved, but she felt even worse.

In her opinion, although Wayne doted on Matthew very much, he just wasn't attentive enough. When they first met, the chandelier fell and almost hit Matthew. Later, Matthew was often sick. Anna could see that he simply did not take good care of the child over the years from these incidents.

She believed that she should talk to him about Matthew later.

As she was thinking, her assistant John returned and said to her, "The people from the headquarters said they would come here to do a random inspection. Mr. Wright and some old directors from the board of directors are coming to visit the hotel later. Should we prepare anything?"

Anna returned to her senses and replied, "No need. When will they arrive?"

"The headquarters said that Mr. Wright has already left and will arrive in about fifteen minutes."

"OK, ask the manager in charge of the lobby today to come, and let some other foremen to go with me. The others can just do their own jobs."

After a few more words, Anna straightened her clothes and calmly walked out of the office.

Wayne was not the kind of person who liked superficial formality. Since he and the board of directors were coming to inspect, they wanted to see how the hotel usually was. Anna always worked hard, so she would not panic.

Soon after she came downstairs, she saw three black cars stop in front of the hotel. Several men in their 40s and 50s in suits got out of the cars, and it was clear that they were all members of the board of directors.

In the evening, while Anna was cooking in the kitchen, Tammy ran over cheerfully and asked with a smile, "Mommy, are you happy today?"

"Why do you suddenly ask such a question? What's the matter?" Anna asked.

"I'm just asking!" Tammy said and then sniffed. "Mommy, did someone give you flowers? I smell the fragrance of flowers on your clothes."

Upon hearing this, Anna frowned immediately.

However, Tammy didn't notice the change in her expression and continued to ask expectantly, "Did Uncle Wayne give you roses? The fragrance smells so good!"

As soon as Tammy finished her words, Anna cut the meat hard with a loud bang and the knife was inserted into the chopping board.

"Don't mention him to me," Anna said.

Seeing this, Tammy shivered and felt a chill in her neck. When she raised her head, she saw Anna's darkened face. Her heart began to beat faster and she didn't dare to speak anymore. After a few seconds, she ran back to the bedroom.

What's going on? Isn't it said giving flowers is the best way to make two people reconcile?

The sound of Anna chopping spareribs was so loud that it still could be heard in the bedroom. After closing the door, Tammy secretly made a phone call.

"Mommy seems to be angrier than before! No, Mommy was just unhappy before. But now she is angry!"

"Let's think of another way."

In the dining room of Wright's House, Old Mr. Wright looked depressed and confused after hanging up the phone.

How could this be? Generally speaking, women will be happy when they are given flowers, won't they? Why is Anna even angrier?

At dinner time, Anna seemed to have cooled down a little after venting her anger by chopping spareribs and cooking.

She put a piece of spareribs on Tammy's plate and said, "Eat more. When I'm not at home during the day, you can heat the spareribs with the microwave and eat them when you are hungry.

Don't eat too many snacks."

"Mommy, the summer vacation is so long. I feel bored staying at home every day," Tammy bit the spareribs and said vaguely. "May I sign up for an interest class?"

"I know. I know you didn't do that. We're still investigating this matter. Come back first, Wendy," Anna said.

"You are lying to me," Wendy shouted hysterically, holding the railing with one hand and wiping her tears with the other.

Seeing her like this, the others broke out in a cold sweat.

Wendy then continued, "You all lied to me. No one believes me at all. You all believe that actress. When she asked you to fire me, you agreed to her request. I heard that!"

Hearing this, Anna was a little surprised. She glared at John and asked, "Who said she would be fired?"

John frowned and said, "Mr. Brown thought that it's more important to transfer the crew members as soon as possible, so he..."

Before he could finish his words, Mr. Brown suddenly cut in, "I did that for the sake of our hotel."

"Even for the sake of the hotel, you can't fire her for no reason," Anna said as she glanced at Mr. Brown with coldness in her eyes.

Frightened by her cold gaze, Mr. Brown shivered and dare not say anything more.

Anna then turned to look at Wendy and raised her voice, "Wendy, I promise I will find out the truth. You won't be fired if you are innocent."

At this time, Wendy's delicate and pretty face was bloodless, full of frustration and depression. She shook her head repeatedly as tears streamed down her face and she said, "I don't believe you. You will definitely fire me."

As soon as she finished her words, the rusty iron railing, which had been out of repair for a long time, suddenly came loose from the cement ground, making a harsh cracking sound.

Seeing this, the others gasped and screamed.

Suddenly, a quick knock on the door broke the passionate atmosphere.

Then John's voice came from outside the door, "Miss Gabriel, Wendy has woken up and is in the lounge now. What should we do now? Also, the police have come."

Startled, Anna pushed Wayne away immediately and sat up in fluster.

"Miss Gabriel, are you there?" John asked with suspicion as he continued to knock on the door.

Anna took a deep breath and tried to calm herself down. "I'm here. I didn't hear you just now. Well, I have something to do now. I'll be there in five minutes."

"What's the matter with you? Do you need any help?" John asked.

Ryan was the sort of person who stood out in a crowd. When he walked over from the other end of the corridor, the crowd made way for him. Although he was young, he looked mature and calm at this moment.

Anna was a little stunned when seeing him. Then she immediately pulled him and whispered, "What are you doing here?"

Ryan just patted the back of her hand gently and showed a reassuring smile. Then he said to Sherry, "Miss Hill, you distorted the truth and tried to frame the innocent receptionist for stealing. If this matter is exposed to the public, I'm afraid that you will have to quit the entertainment circle soon."

"What nonsense are you talking about?" Sherry said with a hint of fluster on her face. "Who are you? You are not the staff of Carousel Hotel and have no right to interfere with this matter."

"It doesn't matter who I am. What matters is the truth. You said that Wendy stole your necklace. Do you have any evidence?" Ryan asked.

"The surveillance video shows that she entered my room at nine o'clock last night," Sherry said.

"You were in the room when Wendy went there, right?" Hearing this, everyone looked at each other with a surprised look.

The staff in the hotel knew that the crew would have a meeting in the director's room to discuss the script at about nine o'clock every night. And during this time, the actors and actresses would not be in their rooms. Therefore, Wendy, who happened to enter Sherry's room and run out in panic at that time, became the only suspect.

"I was not in the room. I didn't go back to my room until eleven o'clock at night." Sherry's face changed and she said snappishly, "If you want to cover up for that receptionist, you'd better think of a more brilliant way."

Ryan sneered and said with his handsome face full of disdain. "That's also what I want to tell you, Miss Hill, If you want to tryst with a man and do something shameful, you'd better find a brilliant way rather than taking advantage of the shared balconies of the rooms. Do you really think you can hide what you have done from others?"

When he finished his words, the crowd burst into an uproar.

Sherry gritted her teeth and continued to ask, "Do you want to lose your job because of a receptionist?"

Anna snorted coldly and said, "I didn't do anything wrong. What's more, I didn't intend to drag everyone down with this matter."

Sherry felt hopeful after hearing these words. And she frowned at Anna.

"I know that you don't want people to know about this. And don't worry, the hotel will keep the guests' affairs confidential. So, I'll have the staff delete the photos and videos they just took on their phones, and I can guarantee that they won't post them online. But, I have a request."

"Go ahead." "I want you to apologize to Wendy."

When she heard these words, Sherry froze. She hesitated for a while and finally frowned and reluctantly nodded her head.

Sherry apologized to Wendy in the lounge in the presence of several executives.

Wendy looked a little embarrassed at that time. After Sherry and everyone else left, she nervously tugged on Anna's sleeve and asked, "Miss Gabriel, am I still going to be fired?"

Anna smiled and said, "We've got it all figured out, so you won't be fired. Don't get carried away by the slightest thing. You should know that committing suicide is the last thing you should do."

Wendy breathed a sigh of relief after hearing this. Tear welled up in her eyes, she nodded thoughtfully and said, "Well, thank you, Miss Gabriel."

"You don't need to thank me. Ryan is the one who helped you find out about this. You should thank him."

"Ryan?" Wendy froze for a moment, and then suddenly blushed a little. She asked, "Where is he now?"

"I think he's downstairs in the cafe." "Then I'll go find him." Wendy walked away energetically. Anna looked at her back, folded her arms and smiled,

It was in the rush hour, and Anna was stuck in traffic. She clicked on the text message and read it. After that, she frowned and dialed him directly.

"Mr. Brown, why do I have to stay at the hotel too?"

Mr. Brown replied, "I don't know, this is the notice from the headquarters. They probably think that if guests have an emergency, you can handle it for them. Do you find it inconvenient?"

"My daughter is on summer vacation and stays home every day. Can I take her with me?" "Are you serious?" Mr. Brown asked unhappily. Anna replied awkwardly, "I just asked off the top of my head. Fine. I'll figure it out." After hanging up the phone, Anna stared at the screen indignantly. It was so unfair.

I didn't even complain about this temporary arrangement, so how come I couldn't take my daughter to check-in? Anna thought.

She decided to send her daughter to Peace's place. Luckily, Peace was on vacation recently and was home every day and night.

"I didn't want to bother you, but it came all of a sudden."

Peace readily agreed, saying, "I'm Tammy's godmother, so of course I'll take care of her. Don't worry. By the way, tomorrow is Saturday, are you off work? Shall we go out shopping?"

Anna explained, "I have to take Tammy to swimming lessons tomorrow first. Every weekend, the swimming pool holds a parent-child class, and parents have to go to the class together. If I can get out of there early, I'll call you."

"What is it about? It's not like she's going to kindergarten," Peace asked, feeling puzzled.

When Anna went to the bathroom, she sat on the couch, poked Tammy's shoulder, and asked, "Tammy, why do you suddenly want to go to swimming lessons?"

Tammy was sitting on the carpet watching cartoons. She blinked and asked, "What are you talking about? I don't understand."

Peace pinched her face and said, "Your mom can't swim at all, and neither can you. Why did you take the initiative to learn how to swim? When you were little, you cried every time you took a bath *

Wayne nodded, picked up Matthew by the collar of his shirt, and said, “Hey, little guy, you can’t get into the women’s locker room. Get your hands off Anna.”

Matthew reluctantly let go of Anna and was carried into the locker room by Wayne.

After making sure Wayne was in the locker room, Anna went in the opposite direction and walked through the women’s locker room to the exit. She then crouched in an open spot and pointed her phone at the men’s locker room, ready to record video. She wanted to laugh but didn’t dare to laugh out loud.

Wayne soon walked out, holding Matthew’s hand.

Both of them were wearing black swim trunks, and Wayne had a white towel around his neck.

Wayne had just taken a few steps when he was tugged by a woman. The woman said, “Coach, do you have a new swimsuit here? My swimsuit is tight, and I didn’t bring an extra one.”

Wayne frowned and said, “You’ve got the wrong person, I’m not the coach.”

The young woman froze and asked, “Huh? You’re not a coach? Then who are you?” “Well, I’m...”

Wayne was about to answer when he saw the people in the swimming pool. He realized that besides the children and a male coach, the rest were all women. Women of all ages, to be precise.

He had a bad feeling..., “Coach, can you come and see my son swim?” “Please coach my child first.” “My daughter...”

Anna could barely straighten her back as she watched the women in the swimming pool surround Wayne with laughter, the phone in her hand trembling.
