

Night Stand 49

Chapter 49

“What? You?”

With Wayne hindering, Anna could only stop. She gave Tammy an angry stare, “You’ll have those this time. But only this time. And your pocket money for next month has just gone.”

Tammy pursed her lips in grievance, but Matthew pulled her sleeves and blinked to her, hinting that he still had money. Tammy started smiling again.

When Anna was about to tell Wayne that he shouldn’t spoil the children like that, her phone suddenly rang. She answered the phone and heard the noises in the background and a woman’s guilty voice, “Anna, are you at home? I need you to come now.”

“What happened? Anna asked a few questions and suddenly became nervous, “What? How can you...

She couldn’t say too much with Wayne staying with her, so she quickly hung up. She looked at him, “I have something to do know. Can you look after Tammy for a while?”

“Okay.” “Thank you.”

Without waiting for Wayne to finish his sentence, Anna hurriedly passed the queue in front of the checkout counter and ran to the gate of the supermarket. She seemed to be in a hurry.

Wayne wanted to say “What happened? I can drive you there.” But he didn’t have the chance to say it.

It happened to be rush hour now. The taxi was caught in a traffic jam, and it took her almost an hour to get to the airport police department. On stepping into the room, she saw a woman sitting straight and haughtily on a chair, in black and white and a pair of sunglasses.

Her white shirt was tucked into a black fishtail skirt. The 4–inch red–soled black high heels had perfectly accented her slender and strong legs. She was holding a silver sequin purse, which reflected cold light and gave her an air of arrogance and indifference.

“Peace.” Anna quickly walked to her, “What have you done again?”

“What have I done?” Peace took off her glasses and showed her pretty little face, still angry.
