

Night Stand 90

Chapter 90

"Mr. Miller is back." A maid's voice came from outside,

Then a tall man in a suit came into the house from the yard. He was in his fifties, looking very dignified and imposing.

When the man entered the house and saw Anna, he suddenly stopped his steps with a stunned look. Staring blankly at Anna, he whispered in a barely audible voice, "Marina"

Anna stood up immediately and greeted in a low voice, "Hi, Uncle Joe"

Hearing that, Joe came back to earth but then was stunned again. He gazed at Anna for a moment and said happily, "Anna, it's you. You've grown up. I heard that you went abroad a few years ago. When did you come back?"

Joe's attitude made Anna feel better. She answered, "I've been back for several months and have been busy with my work."

"You've found a job? What do you do?" Joe asked. "I work at Carousel Hotel now," Anna answered honestly. "It's quite good," Joe nodded and said with a smile. He was very glad to see Anna.

"I haven't seen you for more than ten years. When I saw you just now, I thought you were your mother. Stay here for dinner. Tell me what you like to eat and I'll let the cook prepare it."

"She's not here to have dinner with you." Before Anna could say anything, Selina interrupted Joe in a sharp voice, "Your niece came back to ask for her mother's legacy. If it weren't for the legacy, she wouldn't have come here. Do you think she specially came here to visit you?"

"Legacy?" Joe was slightly surprised. Anna bit her lower lip and didn't say anything.

Seeing that she was silent, Joe understood everything. He took a look at Selina and asked Anna, "You are here for the legacy?"

"Yes." Anna had to admit it.

Marin was too cowardly. She devoted all she had to Frank, but what did she get in return? She lost everything and died while Frank remarried and live a better life. It's unfair. Anna is always smart but sometimes she is as brainless as her mother.
