

Never Late, Never Away Chapter 576580

Vivian forced herself to put on a bright smile in order to convince Benedict after explaining casually to him a valid reason. She did not wish to see him being troubled and distracted by her problems again. He was tensed and emotionally exhausted after trying to get things resolved for her all this while.

“Don’t spend your time dwelling on the past. Try to let go of everything,” Benedict patted Vivian’s shoulder and motivated her. He did not sense that she was actually telling white lies. His grim face softened as his frustration was gradually replaced by a sense of sympathy.

Vivian squeezed a smile as she nodded and asked curiously, “Ben, are you looking for me? Anything up?”

“It’s a piece of great news regarding your job application. I’ve just received a call from the person in charge of your former magazine company. They requested you to report to work tomorrow.”

“Really?” Vivian asked in disbelief. Her face lit up as her lips lifted into a cheerful smile.

She never let go of any chance to be back to her favorite journalism throughout these years. When she was overseas, she grabbed the opportunity to further her studies in the relevant field. After graduation, she even had her internship in a reputable press agency which appeared to be quite popular in A Nation.

Earlier on, she told Benedict that she was not keen on working in Morrison Group. She was actually looking forward to being back at her former magazine company if there was any chance.

To her surprise, Benedict was very supportive of her decision. According to him, the operation of Morrison Group was running smoothly all this while under his supervision, so it did not matter if she was unable to join the group. Apart from that, he hoped that she could continue to have career advancement in the field she had passion in. He even offered to help her submit her resume to her former magazine company.

“Of course! I’ve told you previously that you possess high qualifications and are experienced in this field. It would be a great loss for them if they don’t hire you.” Benedict sounded really proud of her. "This round, instead of being a normal employee there, you'll be holding the post of Chief Editor."

Vivian was dumbfounded and started to stammer, "C-chief Editor! Ben, h-how did it happen? How can I be assigned to hold the post of Chief Editor?" She totally had no clue about the current circumstance.

"Yeah, I submitted your resume for the position of Chief Editor. Based on your qualifications and capabilities, you are actually qualified to hold a higher position than this!" Benedict had put the effort into planning this great surprise for Vivian. He was delighted that her beloved sister was able to continue pursuing her dream again in her favorite field.

"Ben, thank you so much!" Vivian was overjoyed and embraced Benedict gratefully. However, a question flashed across her mind at the same time. "Ben, if I'm not mistaken, Fabian is the Chief Editor for that magazine company, right? Why did they have recruitment for Chief Editor again?"

"When I submitted your resume, I happened to know that the Chief Editor of this magazine company had resigned. Therefore, I gave it a try and help you apply for this post. You must be confident in yourself. You manage to grab this post due to your own qualifications, and I did not pull strings for you at all. Moreover, the person in charge of the magazine company knew that you're their former employee, and your previous work performance was quite satisfying. That's why they asked you to report to work directly without an interview session," Benedict explained to her with a loving look on his face.

In his eyes, his sister was definitely the best!

Even though Vivian could not help wondering why Fabian had resigned out of a sudden, her heart leaped with joy at the thought of being able to work in the magazine company again. Thinking of Jenny, Sarah, and the other former colleagues in the magazine company, she could barely wait to report to work the next day.

She decided to have an impressive debut as their Chief Editor the next day. In the afternoon, she headed for the mall excitedly, dragging Benedict along as well.

After selecting a few sets of formal wears, Vivian tried them on one by one and requested Benedict to give his opinion. Benedict was nodding admiringly all the time as he gazed at Vivian with his smiling eyes.

For having stayed under the same roof with Vivian for almost five years, this was the first time she dragged him out excitedly to shop for clothes. She was apparently on cloud nine ever since she knew that she was able to be back to the magazine company again. It seemed he had made a wise decision by supporting her to do so. No matter what, her happiness was the top priority.

After choosing the clothes for herself, Vivian was still in high spirits. She selected a few shirts for Benedict as well and urged him to try them on. Benedict was being cooperative and put on the shirts chosen by Vivian one by one, so as not to disappoint her.

Mesmerized by Benedict's stunning look, Vivian felt as if she was watching a fashion show.

How can my brother look exceptionally charming even when he is only wearing such an ordinary white shirt? He is undoubtedly looking more striking than any other male model! Even the sales assistant beside them was already having flushed cheeks as Benedict's charm overwhelmed her.

Never Late, Never Away Chapter 577

Vivian's mind sank into contemplation. She really wondered why such a charming man like his brother was still single. She could not help wondering what type of woman would manage to catch Benedict's eye. Throughout these few years, she had never seen him in a relationship with any woman. Hence, she decided to look for an ideal woman who could match her gorgeous brother.

Since the white shirt perfectly matched Benedict's elegant vibes, Vivian decided to buy it as well. Needless to say, Benedict was the one to foot the bill for all the clothes chosen by Vivian. He insisted to do so as a token of congratulation to Vivian as she embarked on a new journey as a Chief Editor.

The following morning, Vivian was looking smart in an eye-catching black and white ladies' suit, giving off the vibe of feminine demureness at the same time.

While she was heading for the magazine company cheerfully, the whole company was in rowdiness as a result of the announcement that their new Chief Editor would report to work on that day.

All of them huddled around and were gossiping inquisitively about their new Chief Editor who would report to work soon.

"I heard that our new Chief Editor is an attractive lady, but I'm not sure about her temperament. Hopefully, she's not hot-tempered," one of the male staff commented tactfully.

"I heard that she's just back from A Nation, and she was from one of the most popular press agencies there! She's apparently no ordinary person!"

"Yeah, I bet she must be from a prominent family. That explains why she's able to hold the post of Chief Editor upon joining our company!"

"Anyway, she could be making up the story on her exposure overseas and is exaggerating on her own capabilities. Don't judge a book by its cover. We're still not sure if she's really qualified for the position." Shannon hinted in a sour tone.

When Fabian resigned previously, she thought that she would have the opportunity to be promoted. Hence, she had applied for the post of Chief Editor as well. In her opinion, the post was undoubtedly something in her hands. She was waiting eagerly for the moment when the company announced her as the new Chief Editor. It never crossed her mind that another person would emerge and seize the post from her.

Nobody dared to comment further on her words, fearing that the new Chief Editor was a hot-tempered woman and that she would be infuriated upon knowing how Shannon judged her. They were trying their best to zip their mouths so they would not offend their new Chief Editor.

Shannon scoffed silently in her heart as none of them dared to express their opinions.

"It doesn't matter who will become our Chief Editor, as long as we are diligent with our work." Sarah did not join the others gossiping about the new Chief Editor as it made no difference to her.

"I actually see it differently. It's important to have a leader who has a fair judgment. No doubt we have to try our best to carry out our work conscientiously. Yet our future depends a lot on our leader's temperament as well, isn't it? We'll surely have a better career advancement under the leadership of a considerate Chief Editor!" Jenny who was sitting next to Sarah commented fairly.

"You have got a point." Sarah nodded and added again, "I really hope that the new Chief Editor is a nice lady who is both fair and considerate."

Standing outside the magazine company, Vivian was feeling unusually anxious.

The whole city looked different due to the tremendous development within the past five years. To her surprise, there was no significant change to the building of the magazine company. Vivian's heart skipped a beat as she felt a sense of familiarity at the sight of the building.

Letting out a deep breath, she strode into the magazine company. At the same time, she was wondering if all her former colleagues were still working there. I wonder how is everyone now!

"V-Vivian!" Sarah stuttered and stood up instinctively the moment she saw Vivian's figure outside the main entrance of the magazine company. There was visible joy on her face.

"Vivian, is that you?" Sarah dashed toward Vivian but hesitated whether it was appropriate for her to embrace Vivian. Is she really Vivian? She looks really stunning now!

"It's me!" Vivian replied with a smile. Next, she wrapped her arms around Sarah excitedly. "Sarah, I'm back. How are you all this while?"

"Vivian, it's really you! Why did you leave without a word at that time? I really miss you so much these few years!"

Sarah finally could not hold back her emotions any longer and burst into tears. Vivian was stunned and tried to coax her at once.