Chapter 411 Head in the Clouds

"Don't think about it too much. Furthermore, you don't have to maintain any kind of relationship with her. There's no need for it."

Linda was dumbstruck.

She thought that Garry would say something excessive, but was it just these?

"Garry, I..."

"I have something to do. I'll come and visit you when I'm free. Rest well at home."

Linda was dumbfounded once more.

She opened her lips and clearly wanted to say something but was afraid that Gareth would be annoyed, so she retreated. "Alright. Go on with your work. Remember to take care of your health. Don't work too hard, Garry."

"Mm."

Gareth's voice was magnetic, but upon closer inspection, a faint impatience could be heard.

Linda's expression changed, and she could only say, "Alright. I'll be hanging up."

Elisa hung up straight away and sent a message.

—Elisa: ‘I’m outside. It’s too noisy, and it’s not convenient for me to pick it up. What’s up?’

—Rachel: ‘Wow? Where are you? I heard that your cousin was suspended from work?’

—Elisa: ‘Yes. It’s all thanks to you! When I have the time, I’ll make you your favorite dish.’

—Rachel: ‘Haha! What a good friend! Where are you now? Why isn’t it convenient for you to answer the phone?’

—Elisa: ‘At a pub.’

—Rachel: ‘D*mn! You’re not that good a friend! You didn’t bring me along to a pub. Who are you with?!’

—Elisa: ‘I’m by myself. I came here because I have something to do. I’ll come here with you next time.’

—Rachel: ‘It’s because you’re alone. Which pub are you in? I’ll look for you. Even if you have something to do, I have to accompany you. How can you handle it by yourself?’

The woman's body stiffened. She gritted her teeth and wanted to say something biting in return, but seeing the man's icy gaze, she didn't dare to utter a single word. She held back her rage and left.

When people around them heard it, they knew that the man was too cold and didn't dare to go over.

But those far away just thought that Brandon didn't like the woman, so another woman went up to him and hit on him.

Brandon's expression dulled. She would have known about his situation if she had called him by his name.

He didn't want to think about what this woman thought. He pulled his hand back and said indifferently, "I'm not interested."

Everyone else couldn't hear what they were saying. They were incredibly astonished!

"What's going on? He pulled his hand back? Don't tell me that he's interested in that woman?!"

"You must be kidding me! That woman has a face full of red scabs! Who would like her?"

Gareth's cold gaze swept past him. "Why are you following me?"

Thomas was bewildered.

Should he not have followed?

But the next moment, it was as if he had come to his senses. In the end, he said with exasperation, "Alright, I'll wait for you here."

Gareth didn't say anything. He glanced indifferently at the d*mn woman who didn't notice him and sat in her spot. He made his way in.

As for Thomas...

He walked to the corner and sat down as deep frustration flickered across his eyes.

Mr. Wickam kept saying what he didn't mean.

Mr. Wickam needed Thomas today, but he didn't let Thomas follow him. Wasn't it because he wanted Thomas to look after Ms. Elisa?

Thomas' expression stiffened, and he straightened out his thoughts. But he was unexpectedly feeling a little... guilty.

He didn't know if Mr. Wickam had sensed his messy thoughts.

At that moment, once Elisa walked out, she wasn't in a rush to return home. She walked around nearby.
It seemed like she was waiting for someone.

And it also seemed like she was relieving boredom alone at night.

People kept coming in and out of the pub.

There was a glorious and bustling scene outside.

Elisa looked at the entrance of the pub from time to time, and there were endless emotions in her eyes.

Shortly, her cell phone suddenly rang.

Elisa's lips slowly curved. Seeing the person before her eyes walk to her, she smiled. "What a coincidence, Ms. Golding."

This was what Anita had said to her previously.

Anita sized her up. It wasn't the sharp gaze as before and was a lot gentler instead. Looking at Elisa with a calm expression, Anita said, "Are you free? Let's have supper together."

Elisa's brows curved. "Sure."

She locked her car and walked out with Anita.

Shortly, the two of them were in a private room in a restaurant.

"What do you want to eat?" Anita handed her the menu.

Elisa smiled. "I'm fine with anything. I'm not picky. Let me head to the washroom. You can order anything."

There was a washroom in the private room.

Anita didn't say anything and ordered food.

After all, eating here was only an excuse. In reality,

Elisa did not move.

Anita Golding looked at her phone and frowned when she saw an incoming call. She turned to Elisa.

"Please excuse me for a moment. I have to answer this call."

Elisa nodded.

She could not hear the phone conversation.

But Anita's expression darkened considerably, prompting Elisa to arch an eyebrow and wonder if something had happened to her son again.

There shouldn't be any issue with Brandon. Could something else have gone wrong?

"I understand."

Anita hung up right after that.

Anita quietly watched Elisa walk away.

After leaving the place, Elisa headed home. Everything went smoothly, and no one came to cause her trouble.

The following day, Elisa went to the company as usual. She handed in the signed agreement to Kira, causing Kira to exclaim in surprise, "My goodness! Liz, you managed to get Anita to sign!"

Kira was astounded.

It was not because she was easily excitable.

One should know Elisa was in charge of a few of the most challenging proposals. No one in this office, including Kira, and the department manager, Julie, could complete the task successfully.

Yet, Elisa, who joined not too long ago, successfully completed four of them. Furthermore, she managed every proposal wonderfully.

Rose’s glimmered with a hint of tears as she said, “I... I know I shouldn’t bring it up, but if I keep dragging this on, I fear it will be detrimental to everyone.”

Monica’s expression froze, and nervousness flashed across her eyes. She sighed helplessly. “I’m anxious about it, too. That br*t isolates himself in the company every day. I hardly have the chance to see or speak to him.”

Rose appeared troubled and said weakly, “But if this keeps dragging on... Linda truly loves Gareth, but I can’t let my daughter keep waiting for him. We all know it is okay for a man to be unmarried at thirty. However, the same could not be said for a woman...”

Monica panicked when she heard Rose wanted to cancel the wedding. “Don’t do it! Rose, didn’t we agree to be in-laws? You can’t let another man snatch my daughter-in-law from me!”

Rose sighed weakly. “I also want Gareth to be my son-in-law, but looking at the present situation...”
