

Chapter 90

Allison flinched at his words. Tears streamed out of her eyes.

"W-Why are s-saying this?"

Ethan closed his eyes to control his anger and moved back.

"Listen, Allison. I know I did wrong when I rejected you. I will redeem myself. But that doesn't mean you will leave me and go to another man. You are mine, and you will have to remain mine. I am not going to leave you, nor did I let you leave me."

She wiped her tears and nodded her head.

"You can control me, but not my heart. It stopped beating for you."

"Then who exactly is it beating for? I will remove him from this world. Then you have to love me."

She was taken aback. She had never seen Ethan's this side.

"I won't tell you his name. You can't harm him either. You have to cross me before hurting him."

He frowned at her. His eyes turned black. She looked away from him.

She opened the door and said,

"I am breaking up with you. I am no longer your girlfriend. I don't want to hurt you by cheating on you. I hope you will accept it as soon as you can."

She got out of the car. Before she closed the door, she heard him,

"I don't care about this relationship. If you want to break, you can. But you will have to come back to me. I will make sure of it."

She closed the door and walked to her house. When she entered, her mother asked what had happened and why she was crying.

She did not reply and ran to her room. She locked the door and cried.

"Allison, my child. What happened?" Joey asked while knocking on the door loudly.

"Nothing, Mom. Please leave me alone."

"Open the door. Let me see you once. If I see you are okay, I will leave you alone."

"No, Mom. P-Please. Just leave me alone. I am begging you."

Joey was worried for her daughter. After going downstairs, she was just about to contact her husband when her attention was drawn outside the window.

She saw Ethan sitting in his car. He threw something on the ground. Smoke was coming out of his window. When she looked carefully, she realized that he had tossed a cigarette bud into the ground.

Then he started the car and began driving it at high speed.

Joey stared outside. She had witnessed Ethan and Allison together a number of times. Not only she but also everyone else, had observed them both together at the same time. They looked like a couple. The way Allison took care of Ethan when he was sick and the way Ethan saved her in the accident, it really meant something.

Joey had seen Allison have some likeness to Ethan from childhood. Therefore, Glen and Joey were both aware that Allison had feelings for Ethan. But they did not know about Ethan's side.

However, a few months ago, they started to see the love in Ethan's eyes too.

"What happened between them? Did they fight with each other?" She said and shook her head.

The whole day passed,

Allison did not come out of her room. Joey tried a lot to persuade her to come out and have dinner. But she was a stubborn girl. She did not come out, which made Joey more worried.

When Glen came back, Joey told him about what had happened today.

When Glen knocked on the door, Allison opened it.

"You did not open the door when I knocked. But as soon as you recognize your father's voice, you quickly open the door. Nice. I see you love him the most." Joey teased her daughter.

Allison looked pale. She gave a slight shake in response.

"Nothing is like that, Mom. I was about to sleep."

Glen held her hand and pulled her downstairs.

He pulled a chair and said,

"Sit here."

Allison's heart was melted by her father's caring nature. She was her father's princess.

"Dad, I-"

First, eat something. Then I will talk to you."

Allison kept quiet and had dinner. She realized that her mother also had not had dinner yet.

"I am sorry, Mom."

"Your sorry will not help me. I will remember that you love him more than me."

"Oh, come on. Are you jealous of me now?" Glen asked Joey.

Allison chuckled at their conversation.

They looked at her and smiled. They wanted to make her smile.

Allison felt emotional again. She was crying because of Ethan's behavior. He said he would never leave her. He even threatened to kill the person she liked. She was currently debating with herself whether or not she should say something to Ryan about the situation.

Following the meal, she joined her parents in sitting on the couch together. They were seated beside her.

Glen stroked her head and asked,

"Tell me what happened."

"Nothing, Dad." She lowered her head.

"Did you and Ethan get into a fight earlier today?"

She looked at him with a shocking expression. Did Ethan tell him something?

"Why did you think so?" She inquired.

"I saw Ethan today when you returned home." Her mother, Joey spoke out.

"Oh." She mumbled.

"Allison, look at your Dad." Glen said.

Allison turned to him and paid attention to him.

"Ethan is not a bad guy. He is not aggressive like others, but a caring young man. Didn't you see how he took care of his family? He always looks after his dad."

She scoffed in her head. 'He is not aggressive? He growled at me today. He even warned me.' She thought.

"I don't want to talk about him, Dad." She cleared the fact.

Glen shook her head. "Kids nowadays."

Allison was aware that her father would support Ethan at any time and in any situation. He would always praise him only. So she could not talk to him about anything.

'I broke up with him anyway. There is no need to talk about anything.' She thought and stood up, and headed to the staircase.

"Good night, Mom and Dad. See you tomorrow."

She heard her father behind her,

"Allison, don't be mad at him. He is the only person in the world who can protect you from any danger, just like he has done several times in the past."