

Pampered by My Ex-husband (Penny and Orlando)

Chapter 5 Orlando Misunderstands Penny

Chapter 5 Orlando Misunderstands Penny

Orlando's eyes were cold, which made Penny feel as if it were winter.

He glanced deeply at Penny with a calm expression. "Let's go."

Penny followed behind him, watching him swipe his card and enter the door.

The floor of the hall was very clean, and everyone waiting at the door bowed to greet him with great respect.

After walking for a while, Orlando turned and looked at her.

Penny also stopped walking and smiled politely at him.

"How much did Colin pay you?"

Penny didn't know the relationship between Colin and Orlando, for she did not know much about the Fletcher family and had no intention of getting to know them.

She had not even seen Orlando's father during these three years.

In her eyes, if Colin could get to know Orlando, he should also be in the same circle.

"My boss said that this deal may be worth over 150 thousand dollars."

"Do you still have a boss?"

Orlando's tone was puzzled.

He thought, "It seems that what Colin said before was true. Moonlight will offer some customers obscure services that I've never encountered before. I never expected to be served on my first night home.

Anyway, it has already happened. There is no point in further concern."

With that in mind, Orlando walked towards his own private room. Noticing that Penny was still following him, he turned to look at her. "Colin said that your price is high, and the service you provide is absolutely satisfactory. Is that true?"

Penny had many clients in recent years, most of them wealthy and generous, but there were also a few who were particularly difficult to deal with.

Upon hearing Orlando's words, she consciously said in an official tone, "Mr. Fletcher, different services may require different prices."

Orlando hadn't expected to hear that.

He looked dissatisfied and sneered, "Is that so? But I'm not satisfied with your service."

He continued in his heart, "Her reaction was very clumsy, and I controlled the entire process. Since this is business, then customer experience should be very important, isn't it?"

Not to mention that she demanded such a high price. Apart from her figure and face, what part of her is worth this price?

She really has an easy money-making job."

Based on the professional ethics of "customers are God", Penny humbly said, "Mr. Fletcher, could you please first tell me which style you like? I will cooperate according to your preferences."

A polite and appropriate smile hung on her cold face, and under the wall lamp, it was covered in a layer of soft light, showing an indescribable softness.

Orlando's expression froze, and he inexplicably recalled, "Towards the end of the early morning, she seemed unbearable. Her red lips were slightly parted, her eyes were vacant, and she could only clasp me weakly around the neck...

Her eyes were watery and bright, and, coupled with her beautiful eyebrows, she looked pure yet enchanting."

Penny raised her face and said with great confidence, "Among the people I've served, there are many repeat customers who are very satisfied with me."

The modern-style houses or villas designed by her, even if they were second-hand, could sell for several times their original prices. Therefore, it was true that all her customers were satisfied with her.

Orlando was a little stunned at this.

"Do you still have other clients?"

Orlando felt a faint displeasure and asked with a frown, "Isn't that your first time?"

"How could it be? I've been in this industry for three years."

Penny was a bit surprised, as if she didn't understand why he would ask so. She couldn't help but think, "What on earth did Mr. Levine say to him?"

As soon as she had finished speaking, Orlando's face turned cold.

He felt somewhat angry and upset. "Enough, don't follow me. Our deal is over, and don't think about getting anything else from me."

Penny paused, unable to understand why he was suddenly angry. "Then can I go to Mr. Levine?"

In Orlando's eyes, her bewilderment was nothing more than playing dumb. He narrowed his eyes slightly and wore an expression of displeasure.

"Is he also your client?"

"You can say so." Penny nodded and thought, "Anyway, he may become my client in the future, right?"

Orlando's face darkened even more, and he walked away without a moment's hesitation.

Penny stood there and thought, "Did my answer offend him? I didn't say much or do wrong, so why is he still dissatisfied?"

He shouldn't know my identity yet, right?"

Just at that moment, Kale called her and said, "Penny, have you come in?"

"Mr. Pratt, I seem to have messed up the deal."

Kale was taken aback for a moment. He had great confidence in Penny all the time. After all, she had a special talent for designing, and since she became a designer, she had never said she had messed anything up.

"Room 1402. Come here now."

"Okay."

Penny hung up and then asked a waiter where the room was.

Kale raised his head and looked over at Colin, who was sitting next to him with his legs crossed. "Mr. Levine, the designer will be here in a minute."

Colin had a very handsome face and a very youthful temperament. He smiled and said, "It's okay. My cousin will also be here soon. Let them talk to each other in person later, and the deal will definitely make it."

With his reassurance, Kale breathed a sigh of relief and began to laugh, "In fact, Orlando and I used to study at the same high school, but he probably doesn't remember me now."

With his family background and appearance, Orlando had always been surrounded by people who wanted to flatter him.

And, although they were in the same class back then, Orlando had only stayed at school for less than half a year.

As soon as their talk was over, the door of the room was pushed open, and Penny entered.

She didn't wear professional attire today. She looked elegant in a light-colored casual suit with a handbag in the same color scheme. Her long hair was slightly tied up, and she looked very clean and pretty.

She smiled at Colin. "Nice to meet you, Mr. Levine."

Colin's eyes lit up instantly. "I didn't expect you to not only have outstanding talents but also such a beautiful appearance."

Seeing her come in alone, he felt a bit puzzled and asked, "Didn't I ask my cousin to bring you in? Where's he?"

Penny was a little stunned at this, for she had not anticipated that Orlando would actually be Colin's cousin.
