Chapter 1441

“I have waited for this day for such a long time! I hereby officially challenge you to a duel!” Winsor could not wait for a second longer and immediately issued the challenge.

“I want to defeat you again in the presence of our compatriots, to prove that I am indeed more formidable than you!” Winsor’s competitive spirit was bubbling up.

“That’s right! I have been waiting for this day too! Prove him wrong, God of War! Show him you are better than him! I had always rooted for you!” Minka chipped in.

Winsor was furious when he heard Minka declaring her support for Levi. The woman he loved was rooting for another man! No man could swallow that insult!

Levi took a glance at Winsor and dismissed, “Forget it! You are not my match. You are way below my league, so don’t ask for trouble.”

It was the truth, as he was truly much stronger than Winsor. He could take on a thousand Winsors without breaking into a sweat.

He did not care to get into a fight with Winsor, just like a lion would not be bothered with a challenge from an ant.

Moreover, Levi did not want Winsor to be humiliated in front of all his subordinates.

However, Winsor saw that rejection as an insult, and he was enraged!

That is it?

It is over?

All eyes were on Winsor, who was writhing on the ground, grimacing in pain.

Zar, Bolgun, and Talon were dumbstruck.

Everyone was shocked beyond words.

They could not believe the mighty legend of the Asura Army was so fragile, that Levi could defeat him with only a finger. The disparity in power between the two was unbelievable.

Minka was at first stunned by what she saw. When she recovered from the shock, she let out an exultant laugh of triumph. I was right; I had seen Levi's hidden potential, and it was worth the wait to witness his flourish.

No one could be more astonished than the one lying on the ground. Winsor's eyes were filled with disbelief. Shock was an understatement for what he felt.

Didn't he perished on Mount Drago in Keerea?

How could he be alive?

And how could he be Levi?

Impossible!

While most were still trying to reconcile what they had just heard, Zar and Bolgun were frowning, for they knew it was not impossible.

First of all, Levi clearly had the same superior skills as Crown King, and secondly, he was also in Keerea at that time. Moreover, the set-ups and mind games he described earlier all fitted into the puzzle nicely.

So, Levi being Crown King was not impossible. Maybe a better way to put it was—it is highly possible!

Thierry sighed. They, too, would very much like to see Levi return. But he won't. Can't. He closed his eyes as if the thought physically hurt. There's no way he could've survived that kind of explosion at Mount Drago.

While he and Judy knew better, both the Lopez and Black families were firm in their belief that Levi had committed high treason and hence escaped to Keerea.

"Zoey, let's go back inside. It's so cold out here. There's no point waiting for his return." Caitlyn tried to talk some sense into her daughter.

"Listen to your mother, Zoey," Aaron added. "All evidence suggests that Levi is a traitor. There's no way he's coming back."

Zoey, however, was adamant. "No, I'll wait for him. He promised me he'll be back in three months; it's not yet three months until midnight!"

The others could only shake their heads at her dogged determination. "Why do you do this to yourself?"

Melanie and Jennie were especially unsupportive and freely dished out sarcastic comments. "It's no use, Zoey. That traitor wouldn't dare return."

"For all we know, Levi is having the time of his life now in Keerea, surrounded by beautiful women. He probably forgot all about you!"

Zoey ignored all of them. With Forlevia in her arms, she waited for Levi at the door without a word.

Stupefied, Judy took several involuntary steps back, tripped over her grandfather, and fell with a yelp.

Both of them had the same thought. He shouldn't be alive... Is he a ghost?

Zoey, Cora, and the rest took in their terrified faces with surprise. While Levi's appearance shocked the Lopez and the Black families, their reaction paled in comparison to the Langstons. Hence, they were baffled to see those two beside themselves with terror.

"Don't just stand there," Cora urged the rest. "Help them!"

A few members of the family went to help Thierry and Judy up.

"Thierry, what's wrong?" she asked, looking nonplussed.

"I didn't expect to see him here," Thierry breathed. Though he had come to his senses by now and realized that Levi was, in fact, alive, he was still overwhelmed.

Zoey turned to look at her husband in anticipation. If he has made such a speedy recovery, perhaps he has also managed to achieve the God of War status?

The hope in her eyes dimmed in the next second when Levi said, "Sorry. I'm not the God of War yet."

The rest burst out into sardonic laughter.

"You aren't good enough then!" Cora raised her voice sharply. "Zoey and Evie can't leave with you."

"But I'm stronger than the God of War," Levi declared.

His words drew more laughter from the crowd.

"Yeah, right," someone snorted. "You lost to Winsor even before you suffered the injuries, and now you expect us to believe that you've somehow become stronger than him right after your recovery? That's bullsh*t!"

Displeasure etched in every line of Cora's face. "Is there anything else that you have to say for yourself?"

“To recuperate, and to kill someone.”

Levi wasn’t lying. It was essentially what he did in Keerea.

“Speaking of recuperation... It’s amazing that you’re fully recovered now,” Zoey smiled, taking his word for it.

Life went back on track after their reunion. However, the news that Levi was back in Erudia had spread like wildfire, stirring up negative sentiments among the people.

“How dare this traitor show his face here!”

“He should be hanged for treason!”

Levi’s expression turned grim as he read page after page of the atrocities the woman committed. “That’s... impressive,” he muttered.

That was putting it mildly. Compared to what the woman did, the crimes by the others mentioned before her were like harmless pranks.

“I was a little shocked by what I found, too,” West Sky Lord admitted. It was clear to the men that what they were looking at was a dangerous criminal, the like of which was practically unheard of.

Some of her crimes included laundering a record of thousands of billions, swindling a total of thirty-nine Erudian billionaires in five years, and successfully provoking seven nations into a war by disguising as a politician. On top of being the ultimate mastermind, she was also a highly skilled assassin and spy, having taken out as many as eighteen Gods of War from foreign nations and stealing top-secret weapons research information from the world’s most advanced tech companies. All of those were only the tip of the iceberg of what she had done.

When she disappeared, it was rumored that the Erudian government had confiscated her assets that amounted to hundreds of billions. It was also believed that she had more that she took with her when she dropped off the grid.

"We're probably already in the crosshairs of the Erudian government. It's going to be risky if we target Levi now."

Black Phoenix agreed. "We should work sowing discord between him and the Four Great Families."

"You got it." The smile on Kuro Dragon's face was filled with gleeful vengeance. "We need to put the plan into action as soon as possible, though. After this is done, we can leave Erudia for good. Prince William has already granted The Avengers eighteen islands, a colony, and the titles of noblemen. There's nothing the Euradian government can do after we leave here."

"Don't worry," Black Phoenix said confidently. "I know exactly what to do."

Over the next three months, the Four Great Families established their presence in the society, having gained control of all the other influential families and clans in Erudia.

“Dear God, have they gone mad?” Thierry said disbelievingly, his voice tinged with exasperation. “They want to have Sire killed? Can’t they see that this is all a setup—someone was clearly trying to turn us against him.”

He knew better than anyone that it was impossible for Levi to be the culprit when the latter basically owned the Great Family of Westford. There’s no way that he’d do this to his own people.

The subordinate handed Thierry a letter. “Sir, the King of Frostford issued this to you. He’s inviting you to join the operation to kill Sire.”

The letter contained a Writ of Command issued by the Great Family of Frostford.

The writ was devised by the first generation of leaders of the Four Great Families to symbolize their alliance. Issued in the face of grave danger or formidable foe, the Writ of Command called for all Four Great Families to band together and use whatever means necessary to defeat and eliminate the threat. Failure to comply would mean instant removal from the alliance.

Fearing that the killings would worsen further, the Great Family of Frostford decided to issue the writ.
