Chapter 2611 Sacroria And Doctor Erebus

Mr. X glanced at him and said, "As you're a loyal partner, I shall reveal my plan to you. Though Gods of Restricted Area 76 are powerful, we're no pushovers. We have Dr. Erebus, an influential figure in Lab of Gods. He's a petrifying figure who had killed countless humans and living beings. When he encountered something that piqued his interest, he'd capture it and slice it open to experiment on it. He was the one behind Lab of Gods' projects and the leading researcher in human and living beings' experiments. He is able to elevate humans to unprecedented heights."

After a pause, he added, "Back when Lucifer died along with Levi, it was Dr. Erebus who revived him. Of course, there's no limit to his thoughts and actions. You might not believe me, but Dr. Erebus is the only ordinary human being in Sacroria. He is recognized for his skills!"

Mr. X's voice trembled when he mentioned Dr. Erebus, and it was obvious he admired the latter.

Black Hawk was stunned to hear that Dr. Erebus had brought a person back to life.

Mr. X glanced at him. "I'll tell you something that you know. Remember the weapon developed by Maya Industries that rendered the entire world helpless? Dr. Erebus was the one who developed the special material forty years ago."

Mr. X nodded appreciatingly. "Good thinking! We have a plan, and we are on a tight schedule! Based on my estimation, we will begin the scheme in less than three months!"

Black Hawk's expression changed slightly upon hearing Mr. X.

It turns out that Levi is right. They have a grand plan!

The Black Hawk asked, "Do you need my help with anything? If not, I won't ask any further."

"Yes, I do need your help? I need you to grant me access to all power stations," Mr. X said.

They were the ones who dug up the Progenitors.

Although the Progenitors' emergence created a new era and caused chaos everywhere, they had no other uses.

Therefore, Jester King and the others did not give many thoughts about them.

Now, Mr. X suddenly mentioned the Progenitors.

Levi sighed after hearing Black Hawk’s explanation. “Dr. Erebus? It’s that bad?”

On the surface, it may seem that Levi and the others were fighting against Lucifer and his men.

In actuality, they were opposing Mr. X and Dr. Erebus.

Did he save Lucifer's life? He's the one behind all those experiment plans! That's terrible! He even completed research on the Gods of Restricted Area 76, making him a terrifying enemy.

Levi touched his chin and asked, "Is he the only ordinary human in Sacroria?"

Levi felt a little relieved. At least they were right so far.

Furthermore, they received a lot of information and formulated many preventive measures.

If Levi were to face these Warmachine directly, he did not doubt that he could destroy them.

However, he would only face it directly as a last resort.

If possible, he would not fight it in person.

If he appeared in person, it would become impossible to get rid of the Warmachine quietly.

Playvolume00:00/00:44TruvidfullScreen

Levi would expose his identity if he appeared to fight them.

Initially, Levi only planned to deal with the core of the Lab of Gods himself. He had no plans to fight Mr. X and the others in person.

Instead, he would only show up to deal with Sacroria.

If Levi exposed his identity before that, their effort would all come to nothing.

That was not an easy feat, and most would fail that task.

If Levi were to bring it up... Would anyone support him?

Was there anyone who could actually handle the consequences of failing?

Moreover, there was no saying if anyone would actually believe in prediction about the imminent disaster.

Even if they believed him, it was still a matter of building an enormous defensive wall.

That would require them to tap into the country's resources and make a lasting change. Was there anyone who was willing to be the first to take that risk?

Playvolume00:00/00:44TruvidfullScreen

If the project ended up being a success, their names would be written in the history books, and they would be praised endlessly.

However, the reverse was also true. They would be dissed endlessly if that project ended up being a disaster.

No one wanted to risk it.

"Yes, the minimum is three hundred meters, but if possible, it's best if it reaches four or five hundred meters," replied Levi with a straight face on.

According to the information from the Maya Industries, the Lab of Gods' expert, Dr. Dark, had created a machine that was about sixty meters tall.

That information was about three or four years old.

Given the progress of technology, Levi estimated that the same type of machine should be about seventy or eighty meters tall at that moment.

It might even be over one hundred meters tall.

Levi had always valued being safe, so he upped his estimate and assumed that the machine was about one hundred and fifty meters tall.

Playvolume00:00/00:44TruvidfullScreen

It doesn't matter how smart Dr. Dark is, or how advanced his technology is. There is no way his machine can be over a hundred and fifty meters tall.

It wasn't possible for the machine to be taller than that, and that was why Levi set the minimum height of the wall as twice the height, which was three hundred meters.

"It is likely that the Lab of Gods' plan is to use that machine to invade every single country in the world. It will be too late if we work on our defenses after they have already built their machines.

"And it gets worse! The Lab of Gods will reveal themselves after they introduce their weapon to their world. They have grown to be so powerful that their strength is beyond imagination. It will be a disaster," replied Levi nervously.

Craig grinned and replied, "Aren't you overreacting a little, Crown King? Our country also has machines that are over a hundred meters tall.

"In fact, it's been a while since our research team successfully developed combat machinery that is over a hundred meters tall. Garrison Industry and the Wilcox family both created gigantic robots. The tallest among them was about one hundred and fifty meters tall.

"These machines are undeniably powerful, but they had their shortcomings as well. The destruction they wreak is terrifying, but it's definitely not enough to be classified as a disaster. Hence, there's no way we'd get the entire country to join forces and build this wall."

The other council member, Nicholas Ramon, chimed in, "It should also be noted that according to various sources, the Lab of Gods has been annihilated. The threat they pose no longer exists. Crown King, I think everything you heard is just a conspiracy theory.

Chapter 2619 How Certain Are You

It was ridiculous for Levi to show up suddenly and ask them to get the entire country to join forces just to build a defensive wall within two months.

Claiming that the disaster will strike in three months and that the Lab of Gods still exists...

Everything seemed so ridiculous. It was as though it came out of a children's storybook.

Levi was neither.

Someone suddenly stepped forward and asked Levi that crucial question.

It was Gary McGonagals, the most powerful of the four top members there.

He was a warrior and used to be a killing machine in the army.

He believed in Levi because he had experienced something similar before.

Back then, he predicted what his enemies would do in a month, but no one listened to him.

Everyone thought that his thoughts were ridiculous and illogical.
