Chapter 125

Gina's expression was slightly solemn. She asked, 'Don't you want me to be your girlfriend?'

"Of course!" Gabriel sounded a little desperate.

"But I haven't thought it through. I don't know when I'll be able to think it through. I'm not confident in dating. Gina replied.

She could handle things like computers, painting, design, and business with ease. However, in terms of dating, she had no experience to talk about and had never looked forward to it.

Back then, Gina had only agreed to give Gabriel a chance to woo her in a moment of desperation. However, she knew very well that she could not accept Gabriel's gifts with a clear conscience.

That would burden her.

She felt that she should make things clearer. "All of your efforts would be in vain if I reject you in the future."

Gabriel could not help but laugh after he heard what Gina said. He explained, "Gina, it's my wish to woo you, and it's your right to reject me. Since I've made it clear that I want to woo you, it's only right for me to treat you well. Don't feel burdened. I'm serious. I don't ask for anything in return for everything I've done. I also don't want you to feel obligated to be my girlfriend."

Gina did not know what to say after she heard Gabriel's sincere confession.

After walking out of the elevator, Gina waited for the police at the entrance of the Jackson Group.

Then, Jasmine took the elevator down.

She shamelessly stepped forward. "Gabriel..."

Gabriel looked at Jasmine impatiently. "There's something I need you to do."

Jasmine was stunned. She even forgot that she had come down to cause a ruckus and not let the two of them stay together in peace.

She was no longer in a mood to care now that Gabriel had taken the initiative to talk to her. Gabriel sounded like he was ordering his subordinates around.

"Gabriel, tell me. As long as I can do it, I'll definitely help you!"

Although Jasmine was a little surprised that Gabriel would suddenly ask her to do something, she had to agree first.

Delete that malicious Tweet you posted," Gabriel said.

Gabriel had seen Jasmine's post questioning the results of the league tournament. She had accused Gina of secretly letting her best friend win. Gabriel was furious that Jasmine had come to stir up trouble at a time like this.

Jasmine was stunned. She didn't expect this to happen.

"No... I won't delete it," Jasmine said stubbornly.

Gabriel did not continue to force his request because he did not like to repeat meaningless nonsense a second time. Seeing that David had also come down, Gabriel frowned and asked him, "Didn't I ask you to ask someone to chase her out?"

David was helpless. Jasmine was punching and kicking him. He was dodging her hits, so she managed to get into the elevator and came down first.

"I'll send Miss Bush away immediately, David said with a fake simile.

He said he was going to send her away, but he was going to chase her out.

"You stinky worker! You're dead if you dare to touch me!" Jasmine warned as she glared at David.

David sneered and shoved Jasmine, "Miss Bush, I can only help you since you're refusing to leave."

"Don't touch me!" Jasmine went crazy and screamed, "Gabriel, you can't let someone treat me like this!"

Gabriel frowned impatiently. Jasmine had almost ruined his relationship with Gina. He was furious, "Why not? Who do you think you are?"

Jasmine's heart shattered when she heard this.

Sirens blared. The police had arrived.

The police officer walked up to Gina. "Hello, Miss Miller. Regarding Phillip Miller's case, we found your fingerprints on the dagger under the bed. We have tentatively determined that you are suspected of a major crime. This is the arrest warrant.

"My fingerprints?"

Gina was slightly surprised. She had not touched the dagger at all, yet her fingerprints had been left behind. Of course, she did not think that the police would slander her.

There was only one possibility. Someone had taken her fingerprints and framed her. That person was prepared.

"Miss Miller, please cooperate." The police officer took out handcuffs.

Gina didn't say anything and cooperatively let the police put it on.

Gabriel and David were both stunned. Jasmine came back to her senses and laughed out loud. "Gina, you murderer. You won't shed your disguise unless you're about to die, right? Let's see how you're going to defend yourself. Gabriel, you're seeing this, right?"

"Her fingerprints are on the dagger. She's the murderer!"

The police said, "The case needs to be investigated further. We can't conclusively determine that Miss Miller is the murderer yet."

Jasmine didn't care. She felt that Gina's death sentence was already set in stone. She had murdered someone, her biological father at that. This despicable act had caused a huge societal impact. If she didn't get the death penalty, who would?

Jasmine was overjoyed.

"Gina..." Gabriel felt a deep sense of powerlessness. He had also been thinking of ways to find evidence that could prove Gina's innocence. However, the hospital's surveillance footage showed that only Gina had entered Phillip's ward that day.

He had yet to find any useful clues.

I'll be back soon. I'm innocent, after all, Gina said with a calm smile..

Jasmine thought, 'She's innocent? How pretentious!'

She sneered and suddenly quietened down. Anyway, it wasn't going to be long after Gina was sentenced to death. She didn't believe that Gabriel would remember Gina after she died.

All she had to do was wait patiently. She wasn't a fool and could tell that Gabriel was very impatient with her. Perhaps she had to change her strategy.

First of all, she had to give Gabriel some time to forget that sl u t, Gina.

Gina followed the police into the car. Gabriel frowned and looked worried.

Jasmine suddenly realized that she didn't need David to chase her away. She quickly left because she had other important things to do.

She had to spread the good news that Gina was about to be sentenced to death.

"Give me my phone."

Neil lay on the recliner and closed his eyes to rest for a while. He had instructed Isaac to give him his phone, but Isaac did not comply.

"Mr. Jackson, don't worry about what's going on online."

"This concerns Gina. How can I not care?" Neil opened his eyes and said.

No matter the public opinion, he had always believed that Gina was innocent.

Therefore, Neil asked Isaac to create a Twitter account for him when he saw people scolding Gina on the Internet. He especially replied to the nasty people and asked them not to jump to conclusions before the truth was out.

Because of that, Neil's Twitter account immediately became the public's top target.
