

Pursuing My Ex-Wife Isn't Easy Chapter 1997

Chapter 1997 “You have to look into this, Daddy.”

Joshua nodded. “Don’t worry about it; I will.”

Bonnie was Luna’s best friend and Jim’s girlfriend before he lost his memories.

Harvey was technically Joshua’s nephew too, and on top of that, his son Nigel had been on the plane on which the bomb was planted.

Out of respect to his cousin Jim, as well as his devotion and responsibility toward Luna and Nigel... Joshua would find the culprit behind this no matter what.

Luna sniffed and said somewhat angrily, “What is there to investigate? It’s clearly Charlotte’s doing!”

The only person who was threatened by Harvey’s return was Charlotte. Therefore, the only person that would plant a bomb on the plane in an attempt to kill the children was no one but her!

“I know.” Joshua shot her a helpless glance. “However, you know fully well how much Jim trusts her now, and if we accuse her of this without any concrete evidence, he will never believe us.”

Luna pursed her lips. She knew Joshua was right, but...she still could not help feeling frustrated by this.

She lifted her head to stare hopefully at Joshua. “Do you think that Jim’s agreeing to let Bonnie stay at Landry Mansion and send Charlotte away...is a good sign that he and Bonnie will get back together?"

Joshua glanced at Luna's expectant gaze and suddenly could not bear to bring her bad news anymore.

He walked over to her side and picked her up from the ground. "Maybe it is, but now, all I can think of is getting back together with you."

Luna widened her eyes in shock upon hearing this.

Before she could even react, Joshua had already picked her up and was heading up the stairs. –

She immediately struggled against his grip, trying to escape, and glanced at Nigel, who was still seated on the sofa in silence. She lowered her voice and said, "Put me down! Nigel is watching us! It's not good to let the children see us like this!"

"Why is that so?" Joshua interrupted her. "It's not like they don't know we're married. Besides

He continued in a low voice, "Don't forget that the children had still been under the

* Impression that you and I haven't reconciled yet, so don't you think it'd be great to let them see us like this?"

Luna did not know how to argue with this.

She bit her lip, snaked her arm around his neck, and buried her head against his chest.

Joshua smiled when he saw how embarrassed she was and quickened his steps as he made his way to the bedroom.

Meanwhile, downstairs, Nigel watched quietly as Joshua and Luna disappeared at the end of the stairs.

When he heard the door close behind them, he let out a sigh, took out his phone, and typed a message to his brother and sister. (The two of them are fine now.)

Pursuing My Ex-Wife Isn't Easy Chapter 1998

Chapter 1998

Meanwhile, at Landry Mansion, Charlotte was sitting on the sofa in the living room with tears streaming down her cheeks.

“Tell me the truth, Jim: Are you starting to hate me now because you think Ms. Bonnie is prettier than I am?” She stroked her face as she cried. “If I hadn't fallen for Heather's trick and got trapped in that fire, my face wouldn't even look like this today. After all, I used to be considered pretty too, before my accident ruined my face!

“But now, I've become nothing but an ugly hag in your son's eyes...”

Her voice started to shake as she sobbed, “Even if you change your mind about marrying me, Jim, I won't blame you. After all, men can't keep their promises, and you're a man, too.

“I shouldn’t have thought you were different; I shouldn’t have thought you would keep your promise to me that you made so many years ago when we were young...

“It’s okay, Jim. Even if you want to break up with me, I won’t blame you.”

Jim let out a sigh when he heard this, walked over to Charlotte, and pulled her into an embrace. “What on earth are you talking about, Charlotte? Since when did I say I want to break up with you? Since when did I say I’m going to break my promise?”

Charlotte cried even harder when she heard this. “But you allowed Bonnie to move into Landry Mansion, and you kicked me out...

“The two of your children love Bonnie more than me, and as soon as I leave, the four of you will become a happy little family. I’m just a nobody...”

Jim let out a sigh and grabbed hold of Charlotte’s chin, forcing her to stare at him. “Why would you think that, Charlotte? Don’t you know that as soon as I laid eyes on you, I made up my mind that I’d marry no one but you?”

A glimmer of triumph flashed through her eyes when she heard this.

Nonetheless, she feigned innocence and whimpered, “But you’re sending me away, Jim...”

“I’m not sending you away, just asking you to move out of here temporarily.”

Jim let out a sigh, took out a key from his pocket, and placed it in Charlotte's palm. "This is a 300-square-foot villa that I bought in the best part of town.

"I bought this as our future home once we're married. After all, we can't possibly continue staying in my parent's house forever, since they'll get better someday, and I know you don't like dealing with elders...so I bought this house for our future.

"I had wanted to give you this as a gift, but I never thought it would be used for such a nurnose."

With that, he clasped Charlotte's fingers around the key and added, "Why don't you stay there and think of it like you're just getting prepared for our future life? You can decorate the house however you like."

In the past, something like this was not enough to reassure Charlotte at all, but this was different.

This was a 300-square-foot villa in the busiest and most expensive part of town.

This was far beyond Charlotte's wildest dreams.

Even Landry Mansion seemed to pale in comparison!

Despite being secretly delighted, Charlotte still sniffed and lifted her head to stare at Jim in remorse, feigning sorrow. "Do you really plan on marrying me? You won't change your mind at the last minute and decide to marry Bonnie, will you?" Jim curled his lips into a helpless smile when he heard this. “How is that possible?”

Pursuing My Ex-Wife Isn't Easy Chapter 1999

Chapter 1999 with that. Tim lifted his hand to gently stroke Charlotte's hair. “Don't worry. The only reason I agreed to Bonnie's terms is because of the children, not because I like her nor was it because I hate you.

“Now that the children love her so much, I can't tear them away from her so soon. After all, I've lost my memories of them, so I have to rekindle our relationship first.

“I don't intend on letting my children be raised by someone else.”

Finally, he removed his hand from Charlotte's hand and said, “As soon as the children warm up to you, I'll kick her out of this place and let you return.”

Charlotte could not help sneering secretly when she heard this.

Now that she owned a villa in the fanciest part of town, she would never go back to living in such a rural area like Landry Mansion anymore.

However, she still pretended to accept his offer rather sadly.

“Alright, Jim, promise me that as soon as they warm up to us, you'll kick her out and let me come back!”

Even if she did not want to live here anymore, she still did not want to make this place Bonnie's territory!

"I promise." Jim let out a sigh and pulled Charlotte into a hug. "You're such a kind, considerate person."

Charlotte smiled coyly when she heard this. "Alright, alright. I'll go pack my bags to leave now."

She could not wait to get to her new house!

Jim was a little surprised by her reply. He furrowed his brows. "Charlotte, you..."

She had been so reluctant to leave Landry Mansion just minutes ago, but why did she change her mind so soon and even appear excited to pack her bags to leave?

"I don't want to make things uncomfortable for you." Charlotte sighed, gently patted Jim's shoulder, and went upstairs.

She did not have much to bring with her, so it did not take her long to pack her belongings.

Soon, she was ready to leave.

Jim kindly helped her bring her suitcase to the front door.

However, as soon as they made their way to the door, the car that he had left to escort Bonnie and the children arrived.

The car door opened, and the first person out of the car was neither Harvey nor Bonnie but the young mechanic that had been hovering around Joshua's house for the past few days.

This mechanic looked eerily similar to Jim when he was younger.

Tim was a little surprised to see him, and he remained motionless for a while, staring at Sean, before finally realizing that this man was real, not just a mirror image of himself.

Sean got out of the car and helped Bonnie down.

He was holding Bonnie's hand tightly as he helped her, and as she placed her hand in his, she whispered something to him in a low voice.

The two of them looked intimate, as though...they were lovers.

Lovers...

The first thing that came into Jim's mind when he thought of this word was the picture of Bonnie, dressed in red, on his laptop screen.

Had he and Bonnie been lovers in the past? If not, why would he have taken a photo of her like this and even put it on his computer? Had he and Bonnie...dated before?

Pursuing My Ex-Wife Isn't Easy Chapter 2000

Chapter 2000

“Jim?” seeing that Jim was staring at Bonnie and Sean, Charlotte, too, glanced at the man, squinting. “This man does look a lot like how you did when you were twenty.”

Jim finally came to his senses. “Do you think so?”

“Yes.” Charlotte snaked her arm around Jim’s. “Although I must say, you’re far more mature and smarter-looking than him.”

She turned to smile at him and added, “Do you think he and Bonnie look cute together? I think they’d make a great couple. After all, this man looks so much like you that if Bonnie were to get together with her, it’d satisfy her wish of dating you. Don’t you think so?”

As she said this, Charlotte tried to observe Jim’s face for any change of emotions.

Jim narrowed his eyes and curled his lips into a smirk as he stared intently at Bonnie, who was chatting happily with Sean. “She shouldn’t be together with him.”

Charlotte tightened her grip around him. “Who do you think she should be together with,

then?”

Jim furrowed his brows and, for a split second, did not know what to say in return.

A few seconds later, he reached out to hold Charlotte’s hand. “Don’t worry; I won’t forget what I promised you. Let’s go.”

With that, he strode away, one hand in Charlotte's and the other wheeling her suitcase behind them.

After telling Sean of their plans for that night, Bonnie lifted her head and caught sight of Jim and Charlotte leaving together.

A strange feeling crept into her heart.

A split second later, she shook her head, trying to ignore her thoughts, and helped Sean move the suitcases out of the car.

She should not be overthinking this; the only reason she had agreed to come live in Landry Mansion was because of the children.

She did not love Jim anymore, and thus, she should not be feeling this way whenever she saw Jim and Charlotte together.

As soon as she thought of this, Bonnie exhaled and talked to Sean to distract herself. "By the way, is the consent form you gave me this morning the same one I had lost?"

She remembered that the real form was probably somewhere in one of her pockets, but before she could decide whether she truly wanted to show it to Christopher, Sean had suddenly entered the room, claiming that he had found the form in her dirty laundry.

At that time, Bonnie was perplexed by this, but she had yet to get a chance to ask Sean about this in private.

"Oh." Sean scratched his head, grinning. "Actually, Mr. Bean was the one who gave it to me; he told me that Mr. Lynch had prepared it for you and wanted me to help him pass it to you."

With that, he even shot Bonnie a puzzled glance and added, “What’s wrong about it?”

Bonnie’s entire body stiffened when she heard this.

She was shocked by this, but on second thought, she decided that it made sense.

After all, that fake form was so real that even Christopher , a doctor, could not find anything wrong with it.

She should have guessed that a mechanic like Sean was not capable of producing such a good counterfeit.

However, since Joshua was the one who had prepared it for her...

Bonnie narrowed her eyes.

It turned out that her lies had only managed to fool Luna, but not Joshua.

However, not only did Joshua choose not to expose her, but he even asked his assistant to help her produce a counterfeit one that would fool everyone else.

As soon as she thought of this, Bonnie sighed and could not help admiring Joshua for his eye for detail and quick wit.

No wonder Luna was so devoted to this man, so much so that she was willing to risk her life to give birth to their three children.