

Pursuing My Ex-Wife Isn't Easy chapter 2137

“You can take care of yourself?” Bonnie followed his gaze, and when she caught sight of what he was staring at, her expression darkened.

“This was an accident.”

Sean chuckled, a hint of contempt in his laughter. Bonnie could not tell whether he was taunting her of her fragility or laughing at himself for his wishful thinking. He stood up and said, “Alright. I understand, Bonnie. I won't disturb you ever again.”

Then, he turned and strode out the door.

“Sean!”

As soon as he pushed the door open, Nikki, who had been waiting outside patiently, lunged into his arms, crying. “Sean... I'm sorry! “I've reflected on my mistake, and I now understand I shouldn't have done this to Ms. Bonnie

“It's just – I was so upset after what happened to me today that I...”

Sean could not help feeling a little annoyed at the sight of Nikki sobbing in his arms. He glanced at her and replied, “Well, you shouldn't have treated her like this no matter how upset you were. Is this how I raised you?”

Tears brimmed in Nikki's eyes. “I'm sorry... I... I'll go find Ms. Bonnie now and beg for her forgiveness. I...” “There's no need.” Sean let out a sigh. “She won't accept that, and besides, she doesn't hold this against you. It's just that...”

He reached out and gently knocked on Nikki's forehead teasingly. "You don't have to worry about her anymore. She doesn't like me, anyway, so you shouldn't do this to her anymore in the future."

Nikki immediately froze when she heard this. She stared dazedly at Sean and asked, "What... What do you mean?"

"Wasn't that why you hated her and kept trying to get on her nerves?" Sean curled his lips into a smirk. "She rejected me just now, so you shouldn't have to do this to her anymore in the future."

Then, he turned and strode away. Nikki remained motionless, staring at his retreating figure dazedly for a long time before finally understanding what he meant.

She bit her lip, glanced at Bonnie's closed door, then at Sean's retreating figure, and finally chased after him.

Bonnie closed her eyes EQ=EC'I let out a bitter chuckle when she heard their footsteps fade away.

It was all her fault. If she had not allowed Sean to get in between her and Jim, none of this would have happened... She was not the only person saddened by how all this turned out.

After all, she had treasured and treated Sean like a brother she never had.

"How's it going?" Suddenly, Luna entered the room, glancing at Bonnie in worry. "I went to Jim just now to force him to come to see you. Did he apologize to you?"

Bonnie furrowed her brows upon hearing this. “You...were the one who sent Jim here?”

“Of course.” Luna pursed her lips slightly. “God knows why, but it turns out the reason he left you in the car was that he went all the way to the airport to stop an eighty-year-old man from boarding his plane so that he could get a name list from him.” Bonnie frowned. “This man... Do you know what his name is?”

Luna pursed her lips again. “His name is Paul Duncan. Why? Do you know him?” Paul Duncan... Bonnie bit her lip. If she remembered correctly, this was the man who owned the orphanage she grew up in. Mr. Duncan.

The name list Jim had asked from him... Bonnie widened her eyes in sudden realization.

Pursuing My Ex-Wife Isn't Easy chapter 2138

If she remembered correctly, the name list that Paul Duncan possessed...was the name list of all the children who had been under his care at the orphanage!

Previously, while trying to piece together Roanne and Charlotte's true identities, Bonnie had sought out a former worker of the orphanage for help.

However, the worker told her that since everything had happened such a long time ago, no one knew the names of the children at the orphanage, nor where each of them had ended up.

Nonetheless, the owner of the orphanage, Mr. Duncan, had a name list that recorded the names of all the children and their whereabouts after leaving the orphanage.

Because of this, Bonnie had intended to track down Mr. Duncan to retrieve the name list from him, but...

He had left Merchant City a long time ago, and no one knew where he had gone nor when he would return.

Bonnie had no choice but to give up on her plan.

However, she did not expect that Mr. Duncan would return to Merchant City all of a sudden and that Jim would be able to track him down and retrieve the name list from him just in time. If her guesses were correct, Jim was trying to get his hands on the name list to learn the whereabouts of all the children at the orphanage.

As soon as she thought of this, Bonnie suddenly remembered the call Jim had received moments before he left her alone in the car.

The first thing he had inquired after picking up the call was Number-9's whereabouts.

This meant that...he had left her in the car because he had been preoccupied with finding Number-9.

A wave of emotions surged through Bonnie's mind at the thought of this. Jim was probably trying to track Number-9 so that he could fulfill his promise to her, right? He did not know that Number-9 had been sitting next to him all along and even almost died in his car!

Besides...

If he had successfully retrieved the name list from Mr. Duncan just in time, would he not have learned her true identity at this point?

Had he found out the truth?

Would his attitude toward her change if he learned what had happened? Perhaps he already knew the truth, but his love for Number-9 was not enough to make him take Bonnie back.

“What’s wrong?” Luna quickly strode over to Bonnie’s side. AX ?FD% {K reached out to hold her hand as soon as she saw the expression on her face. “Are you still unwell? Do you need me to call a doctor?”

Bonnie shook her head. “No, thanks.” She sniffed and lifted her head to glance at Luna. “I want to pack my bags and go back to Tea Cottage tonight.” Luna furrowed her brows upon hearing this. “For what?”

She glanced at Bonnie’s pale face and continued, “You’re still extremely weak now, and Tea Cottage is so far away from the rest of the city. Besides, you don’t have anyone to take care of you...

“I don’t think you should move back to Tea Cottage. I think it’s best if you continue staying with Joshua and me so I can look after you.”

Bonnie waved her hand in refusal. “I can’t possibly impede on your lives anymore. Besides...” She let out a sigh. “Joshua employed Sean as his new driver, and if I continue staying there, we’ll continue to see each other all the time. I...”

She paused for a moment before finally saying, “I want to keep my distance from Sean.” Luna frowned. “You and Sean...” Bonnie sighed and explained everything that had happened between her and Sean to Luna. Luna fell silent for a long time before finally agreeing to Bonnie’s request. “I’ll ask Joshua to send some of his men to keep an eye on you.” Bonnie refused again. “There’s no need for that. All of Joshua’s men were specially picked out by Lucas from among the best, so I don’t think I should waste all that manpower on myself. I’m fully capable of employing my own bodyguards.” Luna rolled her eyes and ignored her entirely. Instead, she took out her phone and dialed Joshua’s number.
