Chapter 1061

Corentin lifted his slacks and squatted down in front of Ashlynn. His ruthless eyes gaze onto hers. "Didn't I tell you that I would never forgive you again if you repeated the same mistake? I said it before. Why are you doing it again?"

Ashlynn was so shocked that her whole body was shaking. She sat on the cement floor, pale. "I also asked you to release me, but you never did so... Yes, I framed you, Salvatore Yeager, my only wish for this life was to stay away from you, monster!"

The air was so silent that it was deafening.

Owen really wanted to stab her to death right here and then. "If not for Mr. Lloyd, would you even go to college? He treated you so well, what did you do? You cannot be so heartless and ungrateful!"

"If I could travel back in time, I would not have saved you when I saw you dying in the alley. I would not want your money, I would not marry you, I would rather die than get to know you... Ah!" Before Ashlynn could finish her words, her hair was pulled by Corentin again.

He said through gritted teeth, "Are you done? Huh?"

"Mmmm!" Ashlynn suppressed the pain on her scalp and the fear of getting her scalp ripped off. She was so pissed that she lost her senses and was completely detesting the man before her. She ran into him with all her might.

The car was headed to the mansion.

Ashlynn was sitting lopsided in the car seat, and the dim light within the car shined on her body. She looked like a soulless ragdoll.

The car stopped in front of the mansion, and the servant opened the car door. Corentin dragged Ashlynn off the car like a corpse.

They went upstairs, and he tossed her into the room.

Ashlynn fell next to the bed. "Uhhh..."

The bed was made already, but the sheet from earlier was still hung on the railing on the balcony.

Corentin squatted down and pushed Ashlynn's wet hair to the side.

"What are you talking about?" Paul was unhappy. "We will just say we didn't manage to find her."

"Yes, this is for Mr. Lloyd's own good." Owen discussed it with Paul and felt much better.

He looked to the second floor of the mansion. Ashlynn was such a pain in their ass, and they must remove her!

Forever!

When Ashlynn woke up, it was already noon.

She looked to her side and found no one.

She felt as though her bones were falling apart as she sat up.

She went to the bathroom and saw herself in the mirror. Her face was swollen like a bun, including her eyes.

She almost could not recognize herself.

She turned on the shower, took off her pajamas, and did not want to see the marks on her body.

The triplets stood obediently by their mother's side.

Ashlynn got out of the car and then saw Anne and the triplets standing there.

The triplets were adorable, while Anne was calm and elegant.

She followed Corentin and approached them.

"Uncle," Anne called him as though she could see them.

The three kids followed. "Granduncle! Grand aunt!"

Ashlynn had suppressed herself from carrying them to prevent triggering Corentin's sensitive feelings.

"Hello, long time no see."

"Ashlynn." Anne looked toward the source of the voice.

Ashlynn took a step forward. She looked at her eyes, so big and bright, except that there was no light in them. She could not help but go forward to pull her hand. "What did the doctor say?"

Anne smiled and said, "Nothing much. After all, I need to recover, and it will not be fast."

Ashlynn’s heart melted, and she could not help but laugh out loud.

“What happened?” Anne could not see anything.

“They are adorable.” Ashlynn was somewhat envious.

Back then, she was also blessed when she conceived a child. She had loved him, but now...

“Will you conceive a child with my uncle soon?” Anne asked.

“No. In fact, I had conceived Salvatore’s child before, but ever since the incident, I had a miscarriage by accident too... Perhaps this was a good thing. The child would probably only be suffering if I had given birth to him under that circumstance.”

Anne understood her.

If she wanted to spend the rest of her life with Corentin, she would not have tried all ways to get hold of his weaknesses.

How would she be willing to conceive his child?

“Did you meet Inspector York? How did it go?” Anne asked.

After lunch, they bade goodbye and left the Royal Mansion.
Ashlynn slumped in the car seat, swinging side to side, while her cheeks were red. She was obviously drunk.
"I say..." Corentin moved his body over. His eyes followed her forehead, and he looked down, stopping at her red lips. "How are you so drunk with just that few drops of wine? Huh?"

Now Ashlynn understood why Corentin did not allow her to go but eventually agreed to it.

It was because he wanted to ensure that this woman and her baby were settled.

However, Corentin must not have thought the woman would find her.

She looked at her belly and thought she must be pregnant for at least five months.

However, it had only been two months since Ashlynn met Corentin in Luton.

Around ten o'clock at night, Corentin finally returned home from work. He pulled his collar open and strode to the hallway.

He entered, and the woman on the couch made him jump. His face turned dark.

Tina Sparks saw him and stood up shakily. "You are... You are back."

"Who allowed you in?" Corentin walked to the couch, but he was looking around. He even looked to the second floor, and did not see Ashlynn around, then said, "Had I not given you enough money?"

"I don't want your money."

"Then, what do you want? Don't tell me you want me to marry you?" Corentin was amused, but his eyes were menacing.

He really created trouble for him!

After throwing his tantrum, Corentin sat down on the couch and sank into his deep, dark thoughts.

Ashlynn would not be mad at him, would she?

She was the one that said to keep the kid.

Plus, he already explained.

It was only an accident. He was drunk and needed an outlet.

Ashlynn took a shower, then went to bed. Chichi was curled up and sleeping on the nightstand.

She was still thinking about it before going to sleep.

If she had kept the woman and the baby, she would not need to give birth to Corentin’s baby then.

She would never give birth to his child.

"No, of course, Corentin has to be responsible for what he did."

Tina pondered, so she was not even mad at her. Would she not feel threatened by her? Though, she knew that she could not compete with her.

"I heard your name is Ashlynn. They address you as Ms. Thompson. What a dreamy, beautiful name."

Ashlynn chose to ignore her underlying meaning.

She reckoned that Tina was trying to suggest that Ashlynn was like a dream to Corentin, beautiful but would disappear as soon as he woke up.

In fact, Ashlynn wished things to be this way, but would Corentin allow that to happen?

When Ashlynn arrived at the office, Corentin was already there.

The first thing she did was pour him a cup of coffee.

She entered the office. Corentin was not sitting before his desk but on the couch.

Ashlynn then put the coffee down on the coffee table.

"Why is the assistant arriving much later than the boss?" Corentin asked.

Ashlynn stood politely and said, "I am sorry, sir. I was too tired last night and woke up late today. Plus, you really should wake me up."

Corentin looked at her and did not say anything.

"I will get the rug to clean things up." Ashlynn then turned and went away.

Soon, she returned with a rug, and wiped the table, organized the folders, and wiped the window, the cabinet, and the coffee table. She was working with total seriousness.

When her rug was going through a corner of the coffee table, it was stepped on firmly by Corentin.

"Sir?" Ashlynn was confused.

“How are you girls coming along?” Corentin asked.

Ashlynn knew what he meant. “Pretty good. We had breakfast this morning.”

“I had never known that you were such a noble person.”

“I had lost hope for you a long time ago, so no matter which woman you were looking for, and whichever woman that you give birth to, it is your problem and is not related to me,” Ashlynn said calmly.

Ashlynn returned to her room, then stood at the balcony and looked out.

If it were not for Corentin, who dragged her away forcefully, she would be spending her night at the veterinarian.

It would be much more comfortable to accompany Chichi than stay in the same room as Corentin.

"Now you regret keeping her, don't you?" Corentin approached her.

Ashlynn said, "Isn't it because of you that she exists?"

Corentin hugged her from behind. "I will kill her tonight."

Ashlynn felt the chills down her spine hearing it and then got out of his arms questioningly. She looked at him and asked, "She is pregnant with your child."

Corentin took a serious look at her. His amber-colored eyes were like a wolf's, filled with silent lust for blood. "It seems that you are still not happy."

"I am not unhappy." Ashlynn's eyes were calm. Her mood was a mix of the complications from the past. "Salvatore, we had already been separated for over five years. We are no longer married. In between that, who did you find and who did you conceive your child with is your personal matter. By right, it was me who took up her spot."
