Chapter 721

"Well..." Anne was at a loss for words.

The maid next to her was amused.

"Mama, let's go and keep Grandpa and Grandma accompanied, alright?" Chloe asked.

"We'll ask your father later," said Anne.

That was not something that she could decide.

"Papa certainly would agree!" said Chloe.

"We still have to inform him," said Anne.

She brought the triplets downstairs and let them follow the maid to the dining room for breakfast. Anne then asked Hayden, "Where's Anthony? Is he in the study?"

"Mr. Marwood hasn't returned ever since he left last night. Ms. Vallois, why don't you give him a call to ask if something has happened?" said Hayden.

Anne did not feel that something had happened. Anthony was so powerful, so who could cause him any harm?

"Don't worry. He certainly is keeping Bianca accompanied!" She went to the dining room upon saying that.

"Alright." Anne stood up. "Mr. Winston, show her the ropes."

"Yes, Ms. Vallois."

Anne returned to her office. Just as she entered the door, she stopped in her tracks for a moment. She was in a daze as she looked at the man sitting in her place. It was Anthony.

'When did he come? Doesn't he need to keep Bianca accompanied?'

She calmed down, closed the door, and asked, "Is there something you want me to help you with?"

"Are you happy with the interview?" Anthony leaned against the chair with an imposing air and placed one hand on the edge of the desk.

"Mm-hmm. She has already started working." Anne saw that her chair had been taken, so she just stood in front of the desk and went through the documents on the desk.

Anne was not afraid at all. By relying on her children, her life would still be safe at the very least.

"I didn't touch her." Anthony's deep and husky voice could be heard.

Anne lifted her line of sight and looked at him. She was surprised that he would actually explain himself to her.

Anthony asked, "Are you happy now? Are you feeling better now?"

Anne turned her face away and did not say anything.

"Are you still not going to make way?" Anthony asked.

After Anne regained her senses, she hurriedly moved to the side.

"You can decide for the children on your own," said Anthony, and then he pulled the door open and left.

Anne was relaxed all over. She gently closed the door.

Bianca called out to Hayden. "I'll take the triplets there when they wake up from their nap." Because of the incident with the seafood soup in the past, Hayden was still terrified. He said, "There's no need to trouble you, Ms. Faye. I'll take them there." "How would that be troublesome for me? They are my children too," said Bianca, "if you're worried, you can just follow us." "That's not what I meant," said Hayden. "Hayden, don't forget that I'm Anthony's future wife. This is very important." Bianca was trying to tell him that some people could turn a blind eye to such matters, but some people, herself, for example, could not. He should be mindful of that whenever he has to handle any matters.

"I understand." Hayden lowered his head.

Bianca was very satisfied. She got up and said, "I'll go take a nap as well."

Anne went to the hospital in the afternoon and Sarah was there alone.

"Did Dorothy come over?"

"The caretaker said that she came in the morning and left after staying for a moment. A person like her can't be counted on." Sarah had known Dorothy for so many years and she had battled with her for so many years as well. How could Sarah not know what kind of person Dorothy was?

If there were no benefits to her, how would she make the effort to come over?

Anne got closer to look at her father as she wanted to see if there was any difference.

Sarah sighed and said, "It's still the same."

"It's not going to be so soon." Anne sat down.

Sarah asked, "Are the children coming over? Have you called to check?"

"I have. They are on their way." As soon as Anne finished her sentence, the door of the ward was opened and the chubby triplets walked in.

"Mama! Grandma! Grandpa!" Their childish voices were filled with excitement.

Sarah and Anne looked at them with a smile on their faces, but their smile was restrained when they saw Bianca coming in behind the triplets.

Anne found it strange. A member of her father's family?

She could not help but look at Dorothy, who was at the side. After all, Dorothy was the Faye family's daughter-in-law, so she might have met him before.

“I’ll come over immediately.”

After Anne hung up the call, Bianca asked, “What’s the matter with Dad?”

Anne ignored her and looked at Dorothy. “Is there anybody else in Dad’s family? I have never heard him mentioning it before.”

Dorothy pursed her lips. “He’s an orphan. How could there be anybody else in his family?”

“Are you certain that there aren’t any other members in his family?” Anne asked again.

Chapter 726

It would not be bad as well if Bianca has such an uncle to back her up.

Just when they were making such plans, they heard Anne questioning him, “How can I know if you’re telling the truth or not? We can’t just believe anybody who pops up and says that he’s my father’s younger brother, can’t we? Also, even if you’re his younger brother, you didn’t visit him when he was fine, so there’s no need for you to be here now! My father has his own family and daughters and that’s enough!”

Corentin smiled and looked at her without saying a word.

Dorothy sneered, “Anne, do your words make sense at all? Why would anybody come and simply say that he is Nigel’s family for nothing? If he is really Nigel’s family, then it’s absolutely necessary for him to come and visit him! You are just his daughter. Can you hold the same position as Nigel’s family? Perhaps the matters of the past are still something that's troubling Nigel. Don't you want to help him resolve that?"

Anne looked at Corentin calmly. "My father is a very responsible man and he has never owed anybody anything. He is praised as a businessman who always keeps his word in the business field. I'm curious, what exactly has my father done to make the Lloyd family so heartlessly kick him out of the family and not give a damn about him for a few decades? As my father's brother, you should know this very well, right?"

"I'm not too clear on that. After all, when it happened back then, I was still very young, so I don't remember anything. My father even gave the order that everybody in the entire family is not permitted to mention his eldest son. It's my personal intention to come here," said Corentin as he looked at Anne, "if you want to know, you can ask the Lloyd family."

"I won't go." Anne frowned. "I don't believe that your father has no idea my father has already been married and has children: Why should I be in such a hurry to meet him? Since my father didn't have the intention to acknowledge his family, I also won't go against his will."

Anne started to waver because of what her mother said.

Her mother was right. Why should her father be kicked out of the family and suffer so much?

What exactly was the matter that made his father avoid talking about his family and would rather say that he was an orphan?

"I feel that the appearance of this person was too strange," said Anne.

"Why? You've said so yourself. It's because something has happened to your father that his family would value him. This is very normal."

"Corentin said himself that he doesn't remember anything when Dad left the family, so would he have any affection for him? He actually came alone to see Dad. Is it truly like that?"

"He might not have much affection for your father. Didn't he say that his father did not allow anybody in the family to mention your father? A person will be curious about things and people that he has never seen before!"

Anne did not say anything. This reason made sense as well.

No matter what, he was his family.

For some reason, Anne thought of herself and Bianca.

At the bottom of it all, she and Bianca were sisters and their relationships were unusually poor. They would be extraordinarily infuriated when they saw each other as if they were enemies.

However, perhaps she could approach the Lloyd family to see what happened between them and her father.

Anne was slightly stunned. "Do you know him?"

"I can investigate."

Anne understood what Anthony meant. He did not know Corentin.

However, with Anthony's power, he should have no problem investigating Corentin.

If he had a problem, Anthony would not have taken her away so confidently.

Anne sat properly next to him and asked, "What have you found out?"

"I'll tell you after we arrive."

The Rolls Loyce drove into the familiar apartment.

While Anne was sitting in the car, she could tell that the car did not head toward the Royal Mansion.

The car stopped downstairs of the apartment, and both Anne and Anthony got out of the car.

It has nothing to do with Mr. Faye. Further investigation will be needed if you want to find out more," said Anthony.

Anne looked at Nigel in the photo and asked, "Is this couple...my grandparents?"

"Mm-hmm."

"Looking at my dad's age, Corentin should have been born, right? Why isn't he in the photo?" Anne asked.

"Mr. Faye's father has two wives."

Anne was slightly shocked at first, but she understood it after.

Corentin and her father were half-brothers who shared the same father.

Just like herself and Bianca.

However, what she could be certain of at that moment was that Corentin indeed was her uncle.

Anne looked at him in confusion.

When Anthony turned around, he saw the water droplets on the floor that trailed behind her and his expression looked bad. "Clean up the floor!"

"I don't want to. If you want it cleaned, do it yourself." Anne held the pajamas in her arms, walked past him, and openly went into the bathroom. She even locked the door.

Anthony's expression was completely darkened.
