

64: Crew

The Moonlit Council members weren't going to be pleased with this news, but that is the sole reason why I cannot wait to let them know that Selene, Luna, and I were mates. They are currently getting ready for the meeting with the council members.

We are finally telling them about our bond and what the Moon Goddess had done. Later in the evening there is going to be a small gathering where we tell the entire kingdom that we are mates and equal now. I have got two queens.

Dressed to perfection in my royal outfit, I stepped out of the room with a determined look on my face, ready to face the impending discussion.

Nick and Daniel, the ever loyal second and third in commands, also friends, accompanied me to the meeting.

We met Selene and Luna outside looking like they were about to go take over the world in the meeting. Pride is definitely shining in my eyes as they raked over the beautiful ladies in front of me. Darn, I'm a lucky bastard.

Selene and Luna graced the room in breathtaking ensembles that seamlessly blended the regality of queens with an undeniable aura of strength.

Selene, in a gown of forest green, adorned with silver filigree reminiscent of moonlight, looked like a celestial queen.

Her flowing, ethereal cape trailed behind her, mirroring the grace of moonbeams dancing on water. Her fiery red hair is made in a beautiful bun that allows a few tendrils to go loose.

Ads-free >

Beside her, Luna wore a gown of deep indigo, adorned with intricate patterns resembling constellations. The dress, like a tapestry of the night sky, shimmered with subtle yet commanding brilliance. Her hair was the same style as Selene's.

Both queens wore crowns crafted with crescent moons and stars, symbolizing not just their royalty but their shared celestial connection. My chest swelled with pride and love.

As they stood side by side, their outfits weren't just clothing; they were a visual representation of power, unity, and the celestial forces that intertwined their destinies. I'm sure they are not only dressed to impress but to give hell to anyone that deserves it.

That felt oddly comforting instead of alarming. My forefathers are definitely turning in their graves seeing as women are not supposed to be included in the politics of the kingdom. I, on the other hand, want them involved. .

As we entered the council chamber, tension hung in the air. The council members exchanged uneasy glances as I took my place at the head of the table with both women beside me on smaller thrones. Nick went to the difficulty of getting in the throne room for them.

"I have important news to share with all of you. Selene, Luna, and I are mates." I say after forced pleasantries were exchanged.

The room fell silent, and disapproving expressions swept across the faces of the council members. I, however, couldn't hide the satisfaction in my eyes. Nick and Daniel exchanged amused glances, sensing my delight in stirring up the status quo.

The first council member spoke in disbelief. "Mates? That's highly unconventional and could pose challenges for our leadership."

I maintained my composure, a smirk playing on my lips because I saw that coming. "Times are changing, and so are the dynamics of leadership. We believe our bond will only strengthen our rule."

Nick chimed in from beside. "Besides, Crew's got two queens now. That's a force to be reckoned with."

Daniel added with a mischievous grin. "Indeed, a king with two powerful queens. I'd say that's a win for the Moonlit Kingdom."

In the midst of the Moonlit Council meeting, Luna and Selene rose gracefully, their regal gowns swaying with purpose. As the room hushed, Luna's voice cut through the silence like a clarion call. Even I stopped breathing.

"We are not just queens; we are the embodiment of change, a force of evolution that refuses to be confined by the shackles of tradition. Our mateship is not a deviation; it is a revolution, a testament to the strength that lies in unity."

Selene, her eyes gleaming with determination, continued like a practiced soiree. "The moon has witnessed the rise and fall of kingdoms. It has seen battles fought and alliances forged. Our bond is not a threat but a promise; an allegiance that surpasses the constraints of ordinary leadership."

The room couldn't help but be captivated by the majestic presence of Selene and Luna, a duo that embodied the strength and elegance of queens ruling under the moon's divine influence. And they are both mine.

Their words, daring and powerful, echoed in the council chamber, shocking the members into a momentary silence. Luna's and Selene's proclamation resonated with a commanding authority that left the council members in wonder, questioning the very foundations of their long-held beliefs.

"Understand this unequivocally: We are the sovereign queens, and no action of yours will ever alter that immutable truth. I strongly advise each of you to mind the resonance of your words before uttering them. While Crew may exhibit leniency in tone, I assure you, I do not." Selene added with challenge written all over her eyes.

If it were possible, I would have gone down right there to eat her in front of the council members because of how I want to worship her. The power she exudes, the calmness in her eyes though you could clearly see that she is serious about her threat.

Darn!

As the discussion continued, two council members, James and Lucas, voiced their concerns more prominently. James, a stern figure with a gruff demeanor, leaned forward, his disapproval evident.

James grumbled out looking unimpressed by Selene's speech but the fear in his eyes was palpable. He had seen the ethereal power she held and the way her voice still echoes in the room is enough to keep him in check.

"This is unprecedented. Mateship among the ruling trio? What kind of message does that send to the pack? It undermines the traditions we've held for centuries." He said nonetheless.

Lucas, a slightly more diplomatic council member, added. "I understand the significance of unity, but this could be seen as a deviation from the established order. We must consider the potential consequences on our leadership and the perception of our kingdom."

"Times are changing, and we need to adapt. Our bond enhances our strength, and we believe it's a step forward for the Moonlit Kingdom. Tradition shouldn't hinder progress." I say unfettered too.

"Come on, James. Crew's got two amazing mates. If that's not a power move, I don't know what is."

Nick interjected with a grin again.

"And it's not like we're neglecting our duties. If anything, this strengthens our commitment to the kingdom." Daniel added like the twin he is becoming of Nick.

James, clearly uneasy, argued. "But what about the potential conflicts among you three? How can you ensure that personal matters won't interfere with leadership decisions?"

I leaned back, a confident smile playing on my lips. "We're a united front. Our bond only deepens our understanding of each other. Our personal connection will serve the kingdom, not hinder it."

Lucas nodded thoughtfully. "Perhaps we should consider the positive aspects of this union. If it truly strengthens our leaders' resolve, it could bring about a new era for the Moonlit Kingdom."

As the discussion continued, the council members debated the implications of my revelation. The atmosphere remained tense, but Selene, Luna and I stood firm in our conviction that our mateship would usher in a positive change for our kingdom.

"If you are challenging the Moon Goddess' will, then I think you should take it up with her. Not us. This meeting is over." I said lastly then stood up abruptly without waiting for them to utter a word.

Taking both my queen by their arms, we sauntered

< 64: Crew

+5 Points >

out of the room with our heads held high with no

Ads-free >

care in the world.

Author AR

"

I hate those Moonlit Council members and we already have one traitor amongst them. Well, I'll see what to do;) anywayyyyyyys, how are you all doing? how was the holidays? #Vote# pleaseee:)

"

