

65: Luna

I think we need some alone time. Just the three of us. Selene, Crew and I. We have been mates for a week already and we haven't gotten time to be together just the three of us.

Crew is always busy with pack stuff that keeps sprouting out from nowhere, Adrian is also becoming fussy with so many people around. Selene is busy making sure he is alright and so do I. Things are hectic to say the least.

I feel like we are all frustrated at not being able to get time together but we couldn't say a thing without it sounding like we are being ungrateful. Adrian and the pack shouldn't be a burden to us and they are not.

Selene hovered anxiously over the sick Adrian, her concern evident in her furrowed brows. From just a few days ago that Adrian had gotten sick after he mistakenly ate a grape which he is allergic to, Selene had lost some weight.

I watched helplessly, my eyes probably reflecting a mix of worry and frustration as Adrian lay weakened in his crib. Selene's hands glowed faintly as she used her healing abilities, trying to alleviate Adrian's suffering. I didn't know she could heal.

I whispered faintly at her failed attempts. "Is there anything more we can do? He's been like this for days."

Selene sighed looking rejected. "I've tried everything I can. It's like an unknown ailment is gripping him. I can ease the symptoms, but I can't pinpoint the cause."

Adrian's pale face twitched with discomfort, and I reached out to hold his hand, offering what comfort I could though mad I was helpless at that moment. I felt a pang of helplessness, wishing there was a solution to end his suffering. fg grapes.

Selene, frustration evident in her voice, murmured. "I hate feeling so powerless. We need to find a way to help him, Luna. I won't rest until he's back on his feet."

I nodded, my gaze unwavering as I whispered, "We'll find a way, Sel. We always do. We just need to keep searching for answers and not lose hope."

As Selene continued her efforts, I stood by Adrian's side, a silent pillar of support, determined to find a solution for the son we both cared for. The child we love a lot and would do anything for.

I looked at Selene with a sigh at the lines all over her forehead. We have been at this for a while now but Adrian finally got to sleep after she gave him some tonics. She believes in herbs more than hospitals and they worked out just perfectly this time around.

"I think we need some alone time. Just the three of us. Selene, Crew, and I. We've been mates for a week already, and we haven't had a moment to be together." I said in a quiet voice so as to not wake Adrian.

Selene nodded in agreement. "Crew is constantly tied up with pack matters that seem to pop up out of nowhere. Adrian's getting fussy with so many people around, and we're all caught up in ensuring he's okay. It's chaotic."

The duo stepped out of the room to carry on the conversation and bumped into Crew who agreed to their alone time.

Crew chimed in. "I feel the frustration too. We all want time together, but every attempt seems thwarted by pack responsibilities. We can't voice it without sounding ungrateful."

Selene suggested. "What if we take a break from the pack duties and head to the human world? A change of scenery might help, and we can have the space we need without it seeming like we're neglecting our responsibilities."

"You want to go to the human world?" Crew asked with his brows bunched together in between his forehead.

I could understand his confusion. She was almost rd in the human world the last time she was there but I also understand her and why she wanted to go there. I am the one in between.

I smiled at the idea then clapped. "That could be exactly what we need. A chance to be together without distractions, just the three of us."

As Selene, Crew and I gathered to discuss their plans, I voiced out my concerns. "I just worry about how the pack will react. They depend on us, and I don't want them to think we're abandoning them."

Selene was the first to try reassuring me. "We won't be gone long, just enough to recharge and strengthen our bond. I'll make sure to communicate our temporary absence clearly, and I believe the pack will understand."

Crew nodded at that. "It's essential for our well-being and the pack's benefit in the long run. We can't be effective leaders if we're stretched thin. Taking this time will only make us better for them."

I hesitated, "What about Adrian? He's still adjusting, and I don't want him to feel like we're neglecting him. He's been through so much already."

< 65: Luna

+5 Points >

Selene nodded, understanding my concern. "We are taking him with us. I trust the change in scenery will help him heal faster."

I smiled appreciatively because I don't want him all alone too. "You're right. This is for all of us. A chance to rejuvenate and come back stronger."

Ag

Ads-free >

Let's do it. I'm in."

Daniel, Nick and Lilith were very understanding though Lilith looked as though she wanted to follow us which is not possible since the whole reason for this honeymoon thing is to be alone.

The next day we all packed for a whole week to stay in the human world and I can see Selene looking really excited to go see Imogen and Miranda. It was written all over her face the next morning as we stood in the dining room saying goodbyes.

"I'm going to miss you." Lilith pouted as she hugged Selene tighter to her body while I watched by the side with a smile.

I'm sure it isn't only me that thinks Selene and Lilith might be real siblings one way or the other. The way they act and the way their eyes shine with genuine happiness.

"I will miss you too, Lili. Don't forget to rock that party, huh? And you can send me pictures with your phone." She said, pulling away from Lilith to give her shoulder a gentle squeeze.

Under the bright sky, Selene, Crew, and I found ourselves in a serene meadow, far away from the hustle and bustle of pack responsibilities. The air was crisp, and the scent of wildflowers lingered around us.

We decided to stop for a small picnic before heading to the human world in Crews Mercedes.

Selene spread a blanket on the grass as Crew chuckled, "This is a nice change of pace. No pack meetings, no urgent matters—just the three of us."

I nodded in agreement, "Exactly what we needed."

A little break from the chaos."

As we settled down, Crew pulled out a small picnic basket, revealing an assortment of snacks and treats. Selene grinned, down at Adrian. "You really came prepared, didn't you?"

"A leader always knows how to plan, even for a simple outing." Crew gave her a wink.

I reached for Selene's hand. "It's moments like these that make everything worthwhile. And don't ever forget that we are here for you."

"To friendship, love, to mating bond, to Moon Goddess, to Adrian's health, and a break from the usual chaos." We all raised our glass.

Author AR

"

uh huh! alone time!!! what do you think ????

#Vote# pwetty pweaseee

"

Comments

Vote

Watch videos get points (0/15) >