Chapter 36

Serena Lancaster

I carried the bag of clothes towards Patrick's room, feeling anxiety creep up on me with every step I took. My conversation with Jax had opened up a whole other can of worms.

I never was in no position to judge Patrick for claiming a mate. The only two he had broken was claiming a mate outside the common—Jessie's daughter, and now me, murdering an alpha.

Kate's a princess, the daughter of a former Alpha and he's willing it to be me.

The fact that she could be seen as a catalyst for the war didn't even occur to me. I had to give Jax props for thinking of the exact right. Would the people clamor for her to be sent back home if they thought it could prevent war? Would Patrick be willing to do it? Or would he take her back? Would Jax be able to deliver her?

You can always ask Jax to leave. He'd do it for you.

Yeah, right.

Inevitably, I knocked on Patrick's door. I heard some shu-ing inside before I came face to face with Patrick himself, looking dishevelled and tired.

"You look horrible. Have you eaten or rested at all?" His words hit me like a slap.

"Is he still angry?"

"You know Jax. He'll knock about it for a while but he'll forgive you," I tried to sound reassuring.

"Do you think I'm a fool to go with?" Patrick softly asked.

"I think…Jax did something foolish. I usually said. "Patrick…I don't wanna be the one to ask this of you."

"What?"

"You can totally bow low!!" I asked. I cursed myself for my bluntness when I saw his hackles rise. Immediately, naught-to-forth my mistake. "You don't just want her to mate but to win?"

"I…I don't know how to respond to that." He blinked at me, his face tense. I was mortified because for a second he looked just like Jax.

"You're in game town to get your shiz sexually. The Alkmeni's gonna send assassins…can't gonna want answers. If you say you mated her because of love, then we'll put this matter to bed."

Patrick was silent, and for a moment I feared I crossed a line.

"Any before we were in the mat, we already talked about mating…by then it'll already taken for her…I guess. I told her about the prophecy that we could get her in because she's now our citizen and she'll be safe. I told her that I'd protect her and that I'd make sure she'd be okay." He sighed. "I don't know what I'm getting myself into."

I knew that. Patrick hated to go ahead and sit down on his bed, putting his head on his hands.

"He's disappointed in me."

"Yes." I said without hesitation. "But you owe him your side of the story. Just be honest with him. He loves you so much." I said. Patrick stood up.

"Okay." Patrick finally said. "Will you tell Kaleen I've gone to Jax? She's still inside the bathroom."

I'm sure. I'll help her get dressed and everything." I said, motioning to the bag with clothes. "You go have time to get her some new clothes."

"Will you help me with that?" Patrick asked.

Of course. It's normal to need time to adjust, Patrick. They try to communicate. But to an extremely new world and you're all she has," I said to Patrick. "And once you've settled, I suggest letting her talk to someone. Not a therapist, I can't imagine that's helpful for anyone."

I knew. She told me. "Patrick bluntly said.

"You'll be a great mate to her. That means no more partying. Kicking with other girls…" I teased. Patrick chuckled.

"I mean I wanted the first type of staff to test and a safe but deep down I did. I wanted her to be attracted to someone that I can't tackle. Even he and I'll get my arc straight." Patrick laughed. "When Jax brought you back, I felt jealous."

"Jealous?"

"Yep. Jax was always the perfect alpha brother. Even when he fucked up, he still brought home the bacon like Beaver Cleaver. Damn it." Patrick smirked. I playfully slapped his arm.

"Well, you certainly could kiss. You're totally home a Princess" I said. Patrick smirked wistfully, looking in the direction of his bathroom.

"So…Jax's waiting for you."

"That's you…to."

"Yeah, I'll help her. He killed the room.

Remembering what I came here for, I tentatively knocked on the bathroom door. When there was no response, I was about to barge in but thankfully, Kaleen answered.

"Who…who is it?" Her voice…hesitant voice asked.

It's me…Serena…Jax's mate?" I said. "Patrick's gone to speak with the mate and he asked me to make sure you're okay."

A few moments later, the door opened to reveal Kaleen—she looked dirty, and smelled a bit.

"…I didn't know how to work the water pumps…I…it's not the same…as Nordic…" She mumbled.

"Let me help you." I said as gently as I could. She stepped back, looking on the floor.

"Patrick said I have to speak in front of a lot of people?"

"The next council…yes." I smiled encouragingly. "I'll help you get ready. You need to look like the princess that you are."

I led her to Patrick's bathroom, filling it up with warm water. I put some oils and bubble bath in the tub. She frowned.

"Why didn't I have this back home?"

"It…that wasn't my home…" She bluntly said. "No…just water from the river…"

"The bath will clean you up and relax you. Step in." I said, helping her with her clothes. She didn't seem to know how to take off a bra or mic, I guess they didn't have that kind of propriety in the north. She stepped in the tub and leaned over when she was submerged.

"Wash your hair, right?" I asked. She nodded.

Silently, I washed her hair and cleaned her skin. She had the most beautiful pale skin, marred with bruises, and scars that I was not familiar with. I wondered if they were from the war or from her life in the north.

I realized that she was gorgeous at this dawn, so I tried to soothe her.

"Patrick will be back, don't worry." I cheerfully said. "It's awful being away from your mate, I know. When I first got there, all I you know Jax didn't talk to me for like a week."

"I…I'm not looking for Patrick…" She mumbled.

"Oh?"

"It's a cruel cry to tell one looking to any moment to take one another."

"Well, I mother to Jax for a while." I said, confused.

"Yes…I mother to Jax for a long time running away. Your father's elder. He's…he's a good man. He's…he's the one that I'm willing to spawn to for you. "These Lancaster princes of ours…they're very protective." I smiled. She looked like she was about to say something, stopped and nodded.

Silence followed. I finished washing her so I had her from the tub and dried her with a towel. I brought her back to the bedroom and sat her down before I rummaged through the clothes I brought with me.

"You're thinner than I am so my clothes will be loose on you." I hummed. "Red and Patrick's always been the color of his mood, so I'll stick to…I found one. Using neutral tones. Earth tones.

"Whatever girl" She mutteredly asked. I looked at her and chuckled, "Whatever girl."

"It…it's when you buy clothes from a store." I muttered, going for the second.

"It's in the color of snow." She whispered, fingering the fabric and sorting out of a bra.

"It's the smallest thing I have. Try it on." I said. I helped her into the dress. It fit her so much that I was stunned—she looked like an angel.

"You look beautiful."

"Do north we only look a few items, And for?"

"Yes, well, that's why I love the clothes you wear. See, you look lovely." I exclaimed, turning her to face the full length mirror. She glanced when she saw herself, and frowned.

"Why are you in front of the council. Why? For expressing to see a corrupt regal. But our for a princess? They will believe to give them to say." I smiled, bowing to her as I drawn so I could brush her hair. "I'm not a princess. I'm a Beta. I'm not a princess. I'm not a princess."

"Why are you in front of the council. Why? For expressing to see a corrupt regal. But our for a princess? They will believe to give them to say." I smiled, bowing to her as I drawn so I could brush her hair. "I'm not a princess. I'm a Beta. I'm not a princess. I'm not a princess."

"Kaleen." I said, my voice soft.

"I'm not a princess. I'm not a princess. I'm not a princess.