

Protected Ex-wife Chapter 21 - Chapter 21 Tricky

Chapter 21: Chapter 21 Tricky

After lunch, Cristopher was not in a hurry to head back to the company. Instead, he took Elsie to the top floor to enjoy the scenery. In the end, she couldn't stand it anymore and reminded him that there would be a meeting in the evening, only then did they both return to the company.

The meeting was held for only 30 minutes. When he returned to his office, he immediately instructed Elsie to serve him a glass of water.

After he drank the water, Cristopher flipped open the documents on his desk which were delivered by Jay just now. Giving them a brief glance, he abruptly shoved all the documents off the desk and to the floor.

Elsie silently picked up the documents and tidied them before placing them in front of him. He stared at her thoughtfully and asked, "Elsie, you're from Stroast South, aren't you?"

"Yes," she replied.

She thought that he would ask something else, but he immediately changed the topic. "What's my schedule today?"

"You have an appointment with Mr. Guzman of South Fliffud tonight."

Cristopher nodded, his eyes darkened a little. It was said that Mr. Guzman of South Fliffud was a tough guy. As long as he could keep the man on a short leash, everything else would go smoothly. However, he predicted that Charlie must have had the same plans too. What was more, the latter was one step ahead of him as he had the mayor, Carson, on his side. Faced against such leverage, Cristopher had little chance of winning.

Inevitably, things were going to be tricky.

Meanwhile, Elsie glanced at Cristopher and found that the cheeky guy had a serious look on his face. It was rare for him to behave this way, thus it seemed to her that he was in trouble.

However, she was clueless as to what kind of trouble it was. Although she was his personal secretary, she didn't get to know much about his problems.

She was only responsible for reminding Cristopher about his daily work schedule. Additionally, she would serve him coffee, prepare his meals, clothes, and transportation, just like a nanny. Apart from that, he would discuss work matters with his other assistant, Jay Reid.

While Cristopher had never forbidden her to listen to their discussion, she would tactfully leave every time she saw Jay enter in order to give them some privacy. After all, Joel had explained very clearly that she was just in charge of his daily life and that she was not to ask about other things.

At this moment, Jay and Cristopher were having a conversation in the office. It was only when people started to get off work did the door open. Then, Elsie packed her things and said goodbye to Cristopher, ready to leave.

Unexpectedly, he stopped her and said, "Jay has something else to do. Come with me tonight."

On this night, Cristopher was going to buy his guests dinner at the best hotel in Stroast South. Elsie tagged along and learned that he had hired a few beautiful women to accompany them. The women took turns to make the men drink, and the guests ate happily.

After the meal, they moved on to the next stop—Club H2O—the biggest nightclub in the city. Out of generosity, Cristopher paid to have all of the club's most excellent bargirls to entertain them.

The private room became lively at once, and the wine bottles were opened one after another. Jay managed to show up before the party ended, and it was his turn to persuade the tipsy Cristopher to drink more.

Obviously, the nightclub was different from the hotel. While the people in the hotel were decent, everyone took off their disguises upon arriving at the nightclub. When Elsie saw a man pinning one of the bargirls down on the couch, she got up and went outside.

Compared to the boisterous room, it was much quieter in the corridor. She went a little further away from the private room and leaned against the wall, taking off her glasses to rub her eyes tiredly.

Suddenly, a figure appeared in front of her. "Hey, beautiful!"

Elsie jumped in fright. She looked up wearily and saw a man staring at her with a lecherous expression. The man was drunk and had gone to the bathroom to throw up. When he came out, he had noticed someone leaning against the wall in the corridor. He hadn't paid much attention to her at first, but when he walked past her, Elsie had suddenly taken off her glasses. Upon glancing at her again, he'd discovered that she was a gorgeous woman, thus he had become lustful.

Ignoring him, she quickly put on her glasses and was about to walk away, but the man stepped forward and groped her. Just as he was about to force a kiss on her, Elsie furiously slapped him across the face.