Chapter 8: Chapter 8: A Sudden Realization

Elsie didn't hear her mobile phone ringing when she was taking a shower. After coming out of the bathroom, she found that it had been automatically turned off as the battery had run out.

Thinking that Christopher must be busy spending time with Lily at this hour, she nonchalantly charged her phone, dried her hair, and then went to bed.

Having worked tirelessly for the whole day, she fell asleep the moment her head hit the pillow. The next morning, Lewis called for her at the door, "Elsie, it's time for breakfast!"

With lightning speed, she got up from the bed, washed up, and gobbled her breakfast before hurrying out of the house.

As soon as she turned on her mobile phone at the bus stop, she found that there were countless missed calls from last night.

When she returned the call, Christopher's driver picked up and immediately complained. "Ms. Lawson, I called you countless times yesterday. Why didn't you answer?"

"Sorry, my phone was out of battery."

"Hurry up and come to the hospital. Mr. Reynolds was met with a car accident last night."

"What? Is he okay?"

"The doctor said that he'll be fine, but you'd better come quickly!"

After confirming the location, Elsie hailed a taxi and headed straight to the hospital. With bated breath, she entered Christopher's ward and saw that his head was wrapped in gauze while he glared at her fiercely.

"Mr. Reynolds, are you okay?"

"What the hell do you think? You're a jinx, Elsie! Nothing good ever happens to me when you're around!"

Clearly, Christopher was in a bad mood. If he hadn't dropped her off right on her doorstep, he wouldn't have crashed into Charlie's car, nor would he have ended up lying in this d*mned hospital and missed the chance to meet Lily.

While he had been in love with the latter for a long time, she had been playing hard to get, which only spurred his determination to make her his girlfriend. Last night was supposed to be an excellent opportunity for him to do the deed, but the car accident had ruined everything. As he couldn't make it to their appointment on time, Lily had rushed to somewhere else to do a fashion runway show.

Therefore, Christopher was filled with anger at the moment as he blamed everything on Elsie.

Meanwhile, Elsie lowered her head and quietly endured his scolding. Anyway, she wasn't actually listening to what he was saying.

After cursing for a while, he was nearly out of breath. "What are you waiting for? I'm hungry. Go and get some food for me. Remember, it must be my favourite food."

Following that, Elsie grabbed her bag and hurried out of the door to carry out her task. One must know that Christopher was a picky eater; he couldn't tolerate too much spiciness, bland food, or greasy food. In short, there was a limit to everything.

Since she had a deep understanding of his eating habit over the past few months, she took a taxi straight to the usual destination to get his food.

Half an hour later, she finally returned to the hospital. Christopher stared at her with a look of displeasure, thinking that she was extremely incompatible with him. Now that he was jinxed by her, he would need to deal with her later.

Naturally, Elsie was oblivious to his thoughts. She set up the overbed table and placed the food she'd bought in front of him. "Mr. Reynolds, enjoy your meal."

However, he looked at her and said, "I can't move my hands. Feed me."

For a moment, she was stunned because it was weird for her to feed a grown man. Nevertheless, she decided to help him for once since he'd gotten injured partly because of her.

At first, Christopher thought that she would refuse, but she unexpectedly started to feed him. Though he felt strange, it somehow felt very enjoyable to him after getting fed a few mouthfuls.

Elsie's hands were fair and tender, and her fingers were slender. When she leaned in close, he could smell the fragrant scent on her, making him wonder what perfume she was wearing. Moreover, he suddenly discovered that behind the black-framed glasses, her eyes were quite beautiful while her eyelashes were long.

Not only that but her nose and lips were also captivating. At this realization, Christopher began to feel the excitement bubbling in him.
