

I am a quadrillionaire chapter 2583-The Spirit Cage, Amber City.

Half a year later, the place was still as calm as a lake.

There was someone powerful here so no one dared to cause disputes, for fear of offending someone they shouldn't.

They did not have anyone strong as their backer.

The Campbell family had a new head in The Spirit Cage.

The original person in charge, Egan, had been called back. How he would be dealt with by the family had nothing to do with David and he didn't want to know.

He only heard Salem mention it.

When Egan was in charge, he allowed Perry, the direct descendant of the family, to commit outrages. He offended someone he shouldn't and ended up horribly.

He was originally the absolute core senior of the Campbell family, but now he was marginalized by the family and had left.

The new person in charge of the Campbell family was named Griffin.

As soon as he entered The Spirit Cage, he came to visit David with a large amount of treasures.

seeing the Campbell family's overtures, David appeared very generous and said that he would let the bygones be bygones. That he had already forgotten what happened.

Griffin was overjoyed.

The family sent him to The Spirit Cage with a death order. He must eliminate the misunderstanding between the Campbell family and David, and maintain their relationship with David.

No matter what he did and no matter how much the price, he must ensure that David would not hate the Campbell family anymore.

Since Leila was going through a storm right now, the Campbell family understood what an Overlord represented.

Griffin was not a prominent figure in the Campbell family.

However, since he was well-rounded, knew how to read people's minds, and knew how to speak and deal with things, he was ordered to come to The Spirit Cage.

This was also his only chance to make a comeback.

Once he seized this opportunity, he would have a say in the Campbell family in the future.

David accepted all the treasures sent by the Campbell family but insisted on paying the market price for them.

Naturally, Griffin disagreed.

What a joke! Would he take David's money for the gifts?

It would be better to dig a hole, lie in it, and bury himself alive.

As a result, David only said one sentence: if Griffin disagreed, he should take the treasures away as he would not want anything from the Campbell family. In the end, Griffin had no choice but to accept and let David pay the market price. At least, he had given the gifts. He was being monitored when he came in. So, if he took the gifts back, rumors would start spreading. Then the seniors of the Campbell family would make things hard for him, perhaps even changing the person in charge. Having just gained power, Griffin did not want to leave The Spirit Cage with his tail between his legs. He had great ambitions and ideals. However, he had limited strength. No matter how outstanding he was in other respects and how many benefits he had brought to the Campbell family, it was challenging for him to establish a strong position within such a formidable entity as the Campbell family and become a core member. He could only occupy a side role, stuck in an awkward position. After all, this was a world where strength was valued. Of course, David would not refuse the offer from the Campbell family. A major family like them would only give precious gifts. It would be such a waste to turn them down. David was not a narrow-minded person. The Campbell family did not cause him any harm, only that one of their direct descendants died. Perry also caused his lavish points to skyrocket. Aside from his strength rising to partial Heavenly Overlord, David's Cloning even reached level 6. In reality, David did not hate the Campbell family at all. Looking back at it, he should thank them. Moreover, he would not be free to cause trouble for the Campbell family. After what happened to the Campbell and Marche families, Mayor Salem and Captain Longer of the law enforcement team realized that David had an Overlord supporting him, so they racked their brains trying to curry favors with David. The Birch family also ordered Salem to get on David's good side at any price. Undoubtedly, Arian also recognized that he had to rely on David to maintain his position as the captain of the law enforcement team in Amber City.
