"Moreover, we can also ask if the village committee needs any help," Lindsay added.

Her suggestion made the other three's eyes light up. "Yes, that's a great idea!"

They wondered why they hadn't thought of that themselves. The proposal was unanimously approved.

They guessed that Justin's team would probably stick to their initial plan of going door to door asking for help, so they didn't want to share their new strategy with the other team.

They chatted casually, waiting for Justin's group to leave.

Once they saw them heading towards the village entrance to start with the first house, Lindsay and her team set out.

They asked a villager along the way and found the village committee office. Since the production team had coordinated with the village chief, Adam Warren, for the filming, he was aware and had informed the villagers beforehand.

Seeing the celebrities' approach, Adam was a bit surprised. He warmly greeted the four of them and asked, "Is there something you need?"

Lindsay replied, "We want to learn about the village and see if any households need help so we can exchange our work for some food."

She added, "We're looking to help in any way we can."

Adam thought these guests were quite smart to seek out information first. He didn't hide anything and said, "Our village is a bit behind in development due to its location and poor transportation. We have over a hundred households here."

"Most of the young and able-bodied people have gone out to work, so the village mainly has elderly people and children left," Adam explained.

After giving a general overview of the village, he thought for a moment and said, "There are a few households that might need help. The Lynn family is currently harvesting fruit and could use some extra hands. The Smith family..."

Lindsay borrowed paper and a pen from Adam and wrote down all the information he provided. She also asked for the locations of these households and sketched a rough map based on his descriptions.

After their conversation, Adam escorted them out of the office. Lindsay suddenly pointed to a tractor in the courtyard and asked, "Is this tractor broken?"

Adam nodded. "Yes, it broke down suddenly about half a month ago. We had someone try to fix it, but they couldn't."

Due to the village's limited budget, they were debating whether to buy a new one.

Elric, curious, asked, "Is there a road into the village that the tractor can use? Mr. Barker said it's even a struggle to ride motorcycles to come up here."

Adam laughed. "The path you took is a small, steep one. There's a wider, less steep road that leads directly to the town, where cars and tractors can travel."

Hearing this, the four of them realized Charles had tricked them earlier.

Lindsay's focus returned to the tractor. "Is it very inconvenient to have it broken?"

Adam sighed. "Yes, it's quite inconvenient. We had planned to go to town to buy fertilizer, but it's been delayed."

Lindsay smiled and said, "If we can fix this tractor, could we exchange that for some food?"

Seeing an opportunity to earn their dinner, she didn't want to miss out.

Adam was stunned. "You can fix a tractor?"

The other three guests were equally surprised and looked at Lindsay, asking, "You can fix it?"

They certainly couldn't fix it, so Lindsay's question suggested she could.

Lindsay nodded. "Yes, I can."

She had always known a lot about mechanics and had further improved her skills through various experiences in different worlds. So, fixing a tractor was no problem for her.

Everyone was astonished; they clearly hadn't expected her to know how to repair a tractor.
