

Reborn 1610

Chapter 1610

Filled with guilt, Mia stepped forward, but Kohen suddenly pulled out a handgun and aimed it at her.

"Get out!"

Jensen pulled Mia back.

He looked at the cold man before him.

It was this man who had taken him in years ago.

At that time, Kohen was young, a carefree and privileged young man.

Now, he seemed to have grown up all at once, his eyes colder and more distant.

Jensen said with a troubled expression, "If you ever need me in the future, don't hesitate to find me."

Kohen sneered coldly; pain etched in his brow. He mocked himself.

"I never should have taken you in back then. In the end, it was I who harmed my own brother."

Jensen pursed his lips, not knowing what to say, only feeling an unbearable pain in his heart. It was the first time he felt he owed someone.

That sense of indebtedness suffocated him.

"Get out, and don't let me see you two ever again."

On that night, Jensen and Mia left the McCray family.

As a result of Hayes's ordeal, the McCray family underwent tremendous changes.

Years later, Jensen met Kohen again.

The once-privileged young man had grown into a steady man capable of bearing the family business on his own.

After leaving the McCray family, Jensen did not plan to directly return to the Kooper family for revenge, as he had no power or influence.

Going back to the Kooper family at this time would only result in being sent away to a foreign land once more.

What he needed now was a strong support.

And just at that moment, his father, who had abandoned him for true love years ago, suddenly appeared.

His father had changed his appearance and now went by the name Adrien Tanner.

Jensen despised this man he called his father, yet he longed for the love of a father he never had.

Adrien had flourished in this foreign land, and he had said to Jensen, "Shall we return and take our revenge together?"

His father offered him power, wealth, and the opportunity to make a name for himself in this foreign land.

For a time, Jensen believed that his father had some affection for him after all.

But later, he realized that the humiliation and suffering he had endured in this foreign land were all thanks to his father.

Adrien's plan was to fuel his hatred for the Kooper family and turn him into a lethal weapon for exacting revenge on Gilbert.

But he understood this far too late.

After leaving the McCray family, Mia had no one to rely on.

She had been apart from Jensen for a year, and because of her guilt toward Hayes, she intended to forget him.

But the year not only failed to make her forget Jensen, but her longing for him grew stronger with each passing day.

In the end, she went to find him.

By that time, he had already become a dominant figure in the city.

But when she found Jensen's residence, he refused to see her.

She waited outside his villa for three days, and in the end, she was met only by his butler.

The butler handed her a check and said, "My boss wants you to live well in the future and find a good man with similar interests to settle down with."

Mia looked at the check and laughed.

She laughed so wildly that even tears seemed to burst out.

There were so many digits on the check she could not count them all.

But what she wanted was not this.

"Did he think I suddenly came to him just for money?"

Crying and laughing, she took the check.

But the next moment, she tore it to pieces.

She did not leave but stubbornly waited outside the villa for another four days.

Even if they could never be together in this lifetime, even if he refused to accept her, she wanted to see him at least once.

Just one glimpse would be enough for her.

But she never saw Jensen emerge.

He was determined not to see her.

She laughed at herself, hysterically.

It was at this moment that she finally understood just how much he despised her.

As she became disheartened and prepared to leave, a stranger suddenly appeared before her.
