

Billionaire's Reborn Baby novel Chapter 1061

Collin was different from the other teachers. Others always repeated what was in the book. He had guided an assistant before and did not need to bring books to class. He could associate any simple illness with all other symptoms related to it. In addition, he was wearing a doctor's white coat and a pair of gold-rimmed glasses, which made him look like a very professional doctor. So the children were quiet and listened carefully in his class.

Livia also had a good impression of him.

After school, Collin would always give Livia some small gifts that he had personally made.

Livia took them happily.

Leon was busy picking flowers instead. Living at the foot of the mountain, there were wildflowers everywhere but no roses at all. He picked some and tied them up, asking Collin to give them to Roxanne.

"No, she doesn't like this kind of flower," Collin said as he looked at the flower.

"All women like flowers. Who said she doesn't like them? That's because you didn't send them," Leon said confidently. "You're not married so you don't understand what women are thinking."

Collin took the flower and threw it halfway. Of course, he understood Roxanne, who disliked flowers. What she liked was a flower that would not disturb or cause trouble for people and made one feel quiet.

It was Scindapsus, Chlorophytum, or cactus.

It was a plant that could live itself and did not need to be protected.

And it was not a fragile plant like a rose that could only bloom for two or three days.

He didn't send flowers to Roxanne, but he helped Mike cut wood, help Livia do her homework, and also help Roxanne clean up. He left when it was dark even without eating dinner.

Sometimes, Livia would ask him to stay for dinner, but he would refuse with a smile.

Roxanne seldom spoke.

Collin thought that Leon was right. Although he did not ask her to leave before, Roxanne's leaving was because of him. He did not know how much difficulty she had suffered to give birth to Livia.

Everyone should be angry if he was treated like that, but Roxanne wasn't. All her anger, grievance, and unwillingness had completely disappeared in the past eight years.

But Collin could not forget it.

No matter what, he wanted to do his best to make up for it.

Even if she would not forgive him.

'You asked me to leave.'

Her sad words still echoed in his ears.

Collin removed his glasses and pinched the bridge of his nose.

Tomorrow was the day they left, and he never knew that a month could pass so quickly.

"Tell her that I want to marry you and bring the child back to live with me." Leon advised, "Just tell her to go together with you tomorrow."

Collin lowered his head. "I have already told her."

"What did she say?" Leon asked hurriedly.

Collin shook his head.

"She didn't agree?" Leo asked.

"She didn't say anything," Collin said as he smoke.

"What do you think she is thinking?" Leon murmured.

"I don't know." Collin frowned.

"Is it because you didn't propose? Why don't you try to propose to her tonight?" Leon said.

Collin shook his head again.

"We are leaving tomorrow. Don't you go to see her tonight?" Leon poked his arm, "Women are most vulnerable at night. You should grasp the opportunity and have a try."

Collin put out his cigarette, "I'll catch a ride to the town with you tomorrow and buy something."

"What do you want to buy?" But Leon realized that he asked the wrong question. "What? Are you gonna come back? All right. Your wife and children are still here. Will you stay? What if she refuses to go back with you?"

"I have a resignation letter on my computer. Please turn it over when you get back." Collin patted Leon's shoulder, "If she doesn't want to come back, it's ok. I'm ready for that."

And Collin went in.

Leon smoked his cigar, "Fuck."

When Collin and his men were getting in the car the next day, many students came out and watched them drive away. Livia was also standing in the crowd. Collin saw her and waved to her.

Livia ran to him, "Uncle Collin, what's going on?"

Collin squatted down and asked, "I'm leaving. Can I give you a hug?"

Livia was a little shy and thinking for a moment, "Sure."

Collin hugged her.

"Mr. Collin! I want to hug you too!" Other children also shouted instantly.

Collin smiled and hugged the other children, but he stared at Livia.

Leon stood there and got jealous, "Why does no one want to hug me?"

"Because you are not as good-looking as Mr. Collin!" The children laughed and joked about him.

"Oh, God! You are breaking my heart!" Leon covered his chest.

Other children let out a peal of laughter.

Livia was also smiling.

Collin thought that my daughter was so sweet.

She must have been prettier when she was a baby. She would lie in her mom's arms. Her bright eyes kept looking at the world with curiosity.

She babbled.

She staggered.

When she could speak, what was the first word she said? Mommy or daddy?

Unfortunately, as a father, Collin didn't see that.

"Mr. Collin, you are crying!" Children cried out surprisingly.

Livia was astonished and looked at him.

Collin smiled and wiped his tears, "I don't want to leave you. Goodbye."

The group of students waved their arms and shouted, "Goodbye!"

When they got on the bus, Leon took a seat, "God! Finally! We can go back."

Collin sat next to him and checked the map on his phone. It took two hours to arrive at the nearest town.

"You haven't told me what you want to buy." Leon came over.

"Just buy some stuff." Collin turned off the phone screen.

"What did you say?" The rain was so loud that he did not hear it clearly.

Leon grabbed his shoulder with both hands and shouted, "I remembered! She was looking for you that night!"

The bus left while Collin was standing there alone.

Heavy rain surrounded him, and his world collapsed into pieces. It seemed that every piece was moaning.

'Where did it go? What happened to you?

'Answer my question, okay?'

That night.

Roxanne thought that Collin went to Heving City to rescue people. She was worried something might happen to Collin, so she was desperate to find him.

But where was he then?

He was on a blind date with Jade.

His phone was taken away by Mrs. Mueller.

It was a strange combination of circumstances.

How much had he missed in the eight years?

Collin could only recall Roxanne's words that night, "Mr. Collin, you'd better mind your own business."

He thought that it was not love.

"Mom, Davin answered the phone that Mr. Collin got off the car halfway." Livia ran back with an umbrella and said hurriedly, "After getting out of the car, he disappeared!"

Roxanne got up from her chair and repeated, "Disappeared?"

"Does Mr. Collin want to look for you?" "Otherwise, why did he get out of the car halfway?" Livia was still panting.

"Did you hear clearly what Davin said?" Roxanne asked as she walked out of the door.

"Yes, he said someone got out of the car and found it was Mr. Collin. But no one knew where he was." Livia asked worriedly, "Mom, will something happen to Mr. Collin? I heard the people in the town will rob when they see rich people ... Will Mr. Collin be robbed and locked in the basement?"

"Don't talk nonsense." Roxanne took out a phone from a box. It was not used for a long time and was out of battery. She threw the phone back into the box and ran out in a hurry.

"Mom, where are you going?" "Take an umbrella! It's raining outside!" Livia chased after her.

"Go back! Wait for my return!"

"Ok." Livia stopped.

Roxanne shouted again, "Let Mike guard the house! Don't come out tonight!"

Livia agreed.

Mike stood at the door and gestured anxiously. "My mom likes Mr. Collin, or she wouldn't be so nervous," Livia said.

Mike gestured again.

Livia smiled. "Do you want him to be my father?"

Mike shook his head.

"Why do you say that? I want to take care of you till you die. You are my father in my heart." Livia hugged Mike's face and kissed it.

Tears flowed from Mike's ugly face as he slowly gestured at Livia.

"Mr. Collin..." "...Is my father?" Livia muttered after his gestures.

Mike nodded and gestured heavily again.

"Really?" Livia frowned. "Mike, I don't understand. You said Mr. Collin was my biological father, but my mother never told me. That's impossible. Mr. Collin is from the city, not from here."

Mike sighed heavily.

Livia smiled, "Mom must have searched for Mr. Collin. If they are married, I will call Mr. Collin Dad. If not, then I will call you Dad."

Mike nodded and gestured, "They'll get married."

Livia looked at the door and nodded, "I think so."

Roxanne ran to the school while Davin was standing in front of the only landline phone. Seeing Roxanne running over drenched, he asked strangely, "What's wrong, Ms. Roxy?"

Roxanne looked at the landline and asked, "Dr. Mueller got off the car midway, right?"

"Yes, but I don't know where he is. I only know he got off the car in town."

"How long has it been since he got out of the car?" Roxanne asked.

"Are you alright? Why didn't you take an umbrella?" Davin asked as he brought a towel over.

Roxanne didn't want to speak.

"Get you a glass of water."

The water was cold.

Roxanne drank it and trembled.

"Let me look for an umbrella for you. Just one. Remember to return it to me in class tomorrow." Davin went into his office. Although he said it was an office, it was actually a bedroom. There was a table outside the door to meet his need for work. The room was a large storage room with everything. Even if someone asked him for fodder, he might drag it out from inside.

Roxanne held the glass in a daze. Suddenly, she heard footsteps coming from outside. She looked up indifferently and the glass in her hand fell to the ground.

Davin was startled when he heard the sound, "Hey, did you break my glass?"

Collin's clothes were wet. He threw the bag in his hand to the ground, pulling Roxanne up from the chair into his arms.

Roxanne shivered with cold, while his entire body was burning hot.

Davin came out and felt a little embarrassed. He didn't know whether to cover his eyes or go out to give the two lovers space. Unluckily, It was still raining outside and his umbrella was broken.

"Give me the key to the dormitory." Collin looked at David.

David was stunned for a moment and gave it to him. The dormitory was originally reserved for volunteer teachers. Later, they could not bear the hardship and left. The dormitory was still preserved because David firmly believed some teachers would be willing to come here.

Collin held the key and led Roxanne to the entrance of the dormitory.

When Collin opened the door, Roxanne turned to leave, and he pulled her over again.

Collin opened the door and locked it.

He kicked open the door and pulled Roxanne in, and in the dim room, he pressed her against the wall and kissed her wildly.

Roxanne struggled to hit him and Collin kissed even more fiercely.

He felt tears and finally stopped.

Roxanne covered her face and cried with her shoulders shaking.

"I'm sorry..." Collin took off all his wet clothes and carried her to his single bed, gently wiping away her tears.

She looked away, just not looking at him. "Why are you back?" she asked in a hoarse voice.

"I quit." Collin held her hand tightly.

"Quit?" Roxanne was stunned.

"I'll stay here from now on." Collin lowered his head and kissed her. "I'll stay with you, and won't go anywhere."

"Why?" Roxanne asked in a daze.

"Because I love you." Collin looked at her.

His eyes were slightly red, yet he smiled, "Roxanne, I love you for nine years."

Roxanne looked at him in a daze, a line of tears sliding down.

Collin hugged her.

"I'm sorry ... I love you."

"Collin, you really are a bastard," Roxanne closed her eyes.

"I am a bastard," Collin said, hugging her.

Roxanne bit his neck fiercely.

Collin allowed her.

Davin did not ring the bell today. Instead, he reminded the classrooms in a low voice, "School is over. You can leave."

The children all felt that he was strange because Davin's expression was also strange.

The village chief saw the bag in Davin's office and asked him. He said vaguely and personally sent the village chief out, worried that the village chief would go to the dormitory.

After dinner, Davin hesitated whether to call Doctor Mueller for dinner. When he reached the door, the dormitory door was not closed. When he saw the people on the bed, he quickly turned back and ran away.

At 10 p.m., Roxanne suddenly awoke and spoke with a hoarse voice.

Collin raised his wrist and remembered that his watch had been given to Mike. He raised his head and looked outside. It was already dark. It should be eleven or twelve.

Roxanne lay in Collin's chest, frowned, and wanted to raise her arm, but found that she could not move.

Collin kissed her face, hooked her chin with his fingers, and kissed her lips.

Roxanne gave it a push but did not make it.

The dormitory bed creaked again.

Davin woke up, took out the cotton, and stuffed it into his ears again.

The radio beside the bed was turned to the loudest, and the storyteller inside shouted, "Hey, you woman! I'll teach you a lesson tonight!"

Davin slapped the radio and it stopped.

Collin really stayed here.

After he finished eating and cleaning the dormitory, he then began to gather the students of the first to fourth grades together to teach them lessons. Not only in terms of medicine, but he also taught all he had learned.

He bought a computer in town and a projector. The next day, staff came over to connect the wire to the Internet. On the third day, two cars came over to transport supplies.

There were many sets of school uniforms, white and clean sports shoes, and all kinds of books.

He had made too much contribution to the school, and Davin was so grateful that he did not know what to say. The village chief brought a pig to thank him, but Collin didn't like pigs and refused.

Collin connected the internet, distributed books, and taught students. He had been busy for a week. He only nodded to Roxanne in class. He spent the rest of his time in his dormitory. He was not a young lad who made some impulsive decisions. At his age, he considered the consequences.

Although the hospital and Mrs. Mueller couldn't accept it and kept calling for the past week, Collin insisted and the other side finally stopped calling.

Collin sat in front of the desk. It was a table that Davin had moved in for him. He bought a lamp himself. The electricity here began to supply every day, but the water still only came once a day.

It's fine. He would wait.

Everything was getting better and better.

So were Collin and Roxanne.

A week later, Collin arrived at Roxanne's house with the things in his hand.

He knocked on the door, and when Mike opened the door and saw that it was Collin, he shouted "Ah!" behind him.

"Uncle Collin, you're here?" Livia came first.

Collin walked up to her and handed her the thing in his hand.

"What is this?" Livia took it. It was a little heavy. When she opened it, her eyes widened. "Computer? Is it for me?"

Roxanne came out of the room and said, "She is still young."
