

Billionaire's Reborn Baby

Chapter 1071 Roxy Copper Eleven (1)

"Why are you crying?"

When Roxanne woke up, she was still in extreme sorrow, her face full of tears.

"Did you have a nightmare?" Collin asked as he wiped her tears.

Roxanne looked around, and then she gently snuggled against Collin's arms and wrapped around his waist with her hands.

"What happened? What did you dream of?" Collin asked.

Roxanne shook her head.

Before Collin was about to ask further, he heard Roxanne saying in a light voice, "Doctor Mueller."

"What?"

Roxanne leaned against Collin's shoulders and closed her eyes in peace. "Stay here for one year."

"Yes." Collin nodded. "Where will we go after staying here for a year?"

"Get married," Roxanne said.

Collin froze, and a surprised smile slowly appeared on his face. "Really?"

Roxanne still held his neck and nodded. "Yes."

Collin held her face and kissed it. "You have heard that, right?"

There were still some tears on Roxanne's face.

"Why are you crying?" Collin kissed her tears and asked, "Is it because you are moved?"

Roxanne chuckled. Her eyes were usually washed-out, but now she staring at Collin's face with her total concentration. There were still some tears in her eyes, but she smiled brightly.

"Is it because that you are touched?" Collin kept kissing her.

Roxanne dodged and twisted the bedsheet. "No."

"What is that?" Collin asked.

Roxanne stretched out her fingers and rubbed Collin's face. Collin had loved Roxanne for nine years and Roxanne had loved Collin for thirteen years.

"I dreamed that you ignored me and left me."

"Impossible," Collin retorted without hesitation. "You've always been the one who ignored me."

Roxanne slapped him gently.

Collin opened his mouth and bit Roxanne's hand slightly. "It was you who ignored me. It was me who chased after you and you ignored me." He hugged Roxanne again. "Don't do this again in the future. No matter what happens, you can tell me. I won't ignore you. I won't leave you."

Roxanne nodded.

Collin stayed here for a whole year.

Collin and Roxanne taught lessons to the children. On the weekend, they took the children to play outside. There were many empty and beautiful places at the foot of the mountain. During the summer, there were many flowers and butterflies during the day, and at night, there were countless fireflies.

In the first year, Collin accompanied Roxanne to call his parents in City Y. He held her in his arms.

Cora was distressed that Collin had not been home for such a long time and kept nagging him. Roxanne was suddenly pinched by Collin, so she shouted slightly.

Cora paused and asked sharply, "What is the sound? There seems to be a girl's voice around you, right?"

Roxanne wanted to leave, but she was held tightly by Collin and could not move. Roxanne could do nothing but to see him answering, "Yes."

Cora was very happy. At this time, she did not care whether the girl was from the countryside. Cora only asked, "When will you take her to our home?"

"Next year," Collin said with a smile. "She said she will go to our home with me next year."

Cora immediately laughed. "Great! What's her name?"

"My mom is asking you." Collin lowered his head and kissed Roxanne on her cheek purposely.

Roxanne glared at him, and then she said to the phone, "Hello, my name is Roxanne."

"Isn't your name Roxy?" Collin deliberately kissed her earlobe and whispered, "Davin said that your name is Roxy. I really love this name... Ouch!"

Roxanne kept a straight face and withdrew her hand.

Collin's face puckered with pain.

"Roxanne, hello, hello..." Cora wanted to say something more, but Collin said to the phone again, "Mom, she doesn't like to talk. It's enough to say hello. Talk to you next time."

"Happy New Year," Roxanne shouted.

"Yeah, happy New Year! I'll send you a gift next year..." Before Cora finished speaking, Collin had already hung up the phone. Then Collin turned to hug Roxanne.

Livia and Mike were playing with fireworks that Collin bought outside.

Collin was kissing Roxanne in the room, and the light cast its shadows onto the wall. Livia, who was outside the door, saw it and looked up at the sky again with a smile.

The fireworks exploded, and the world was a mess. Everything was wonderful.

On Valentine's Day in the second year, Collin invited all the villagers in the mountains to attend their wedding ceremony party. The party lasted for three days.

The women in the village were all envious that Roxanne who had a daughter could manage to marry such a good man, Collin. Many women whispered in envy and jealousy.

Davin held the wine cup and explained to people, "They knew each other a long time ago. They knew each other more than ten years ago. At that time, Roxy quarreled with Doctor Mueller and came here when she was pregnant..."

Roxanne did not care about other people's misunderstandings, and she would not mind the rumors at all.

Even though Collin had said that Livia was his daughter, there were still blabber-mouth who insisted that Collin was trying to cover the shame for Livia. They said that Roxanne was a slut in the past and had given birth to a child with another man. Now, Roxanne had seduced Collin. To marry Roxanne, Collin deliberately lied to everyone that Livia was his daughter.

They blessed Roxanne and Collin on the surface, while they secretly began to say that they would divorce in the future.

Therefore, Roxanne had lived here for a long time but didn't get along well with her neighbors. She understood too thoroughly about human nature. She knew that Davin and Mike were the only people who sincerely treated Livia and her well.

In this mountain village, there was actually no one else who welcomed Livia and Roxanne.

After all, they were outsiders.

Besides, because of Roxanne, a big fire happened.

After a while, Davin obviously became drunk. Collin sent him back to his residence. Davin nagged, "You must be happy."

"Yes," Collin answered, "I will."

"Don't let that thing happen again," Davin slurred.

"What's the thing?" Collin held Davin, kicked the room door open, and rested Davin on the bed.

"When Ms. Roxy just came here, she was beautiful and didn't look like a pregnant woman, so someone wanted to rape her. To ask for help, she set fire to the house. She almost died inside. Later, she was saved by Mike, and Mike went back to the room to take Ms. Roxy's computer out, so his throat was burned by fire and he became a mute..." Davin said intermittently, "It's not easy for a woman to live, she, really not easy. You ... you should treat her well..."

Collin didn't expect that that fire would happen for this reason.

"Where's that man?" Collin asked.

"Which man?" Davin was a little confused.

"The man who wanted to rape Ms. Roxy."

"That man is very miserable. He was slashed by Ms. Roxy the next day. Later, he went out to work and never returned," Davin grunted a few times and his eyelids drooped as he said.

"Ms. Roxy was quiet, but she had a strong temper. Later, no one dared to provoke her. That's good. In this way, she won't be bullied," Davin said to himself.

Collin clenched his fists tightly and then said to Davin, "Have a good rest. I'm leaving."
