

Billionaire's Reborn Baby

Chapter 1073 Roxy Cooper Twelve (1)

Before Collin took Roxanne and Livia to Cora's house, he told her, "Prepare the fast-acting heart-saving pill."

Cora scolded him.

When Collin introduced Livia to Cora that she was her granddaughter, Cora collapsed on the sofa, and Mike hurriedly went to the room to look for the fast-acting heart-saving pill.

Cora was just shocked. She did not need to take the medicine, but her hands and feet were so feeble that they couldn't support her. She looked at Livia in disbelief, but her son did not look like he was joking. She began to look at Livia seriously and could vaguely see that Collin and she bore a little resemblance.

"Granddaughter?" Cora didn't believe him. "How could she be my granddaughter? Collin, are you lying to me?"

Collin took Roxanne to Cora's front and said, "You don't believe me, but you should at least believe her."

It was only now that Cora saw Roxanne whom she felt slightly familiar.

The name sounded familiar at first, and Collin reminded her, "You asked me to rent the wedding room. At that time, a girl came to rent the room..."

Cora finally remembered. It seemed that Roxanne was the little girl that rented the house back then. Indeed, her voice matched as well. Cora looked at Livia and found that she was at least eight or nine years old.

In other words, since Collin had ruined the girl, he left her to bring up the child alone.

Cora was the same age as the girl when she gave birth to Collin, and she felt tired though she had a nanny at that time. Moreover, based on how Roxanne was dressed, she was obviously a simple girl.

Cora slapped Collin on the shoulder. "Good! You did a good job at that time! The child is already at such an age. You brought her back now! Do you have any conscience?"

Collin did not expect the plot to go this way.

Roxanne was stunned as well, and she hurriedly stretched out her hand to stop Cora. "Madam, no, it's not his fault..."

"Don't stop me! I'll help you get back at the injustice you've suffered!" Cora was worthy of being a model example of being swift and decisive in taking action. As soon as she finished speaking, she didn't stop slapping Collin more than ten times until her palm became red. Only then did she pull Roxanne over to apologize. "Roxanne, I'm sorry. I am a bad mother. You've suffered so much outside for so many years, right?"

"Girl, you must have suffered a lot too, right?" Cora asked while looking at Livia seriously.

Livia shook her head.

Cora quickly pulled the two of them to sit down on the sofa. She then instructed Mike to go to the kitchen to cut fruits. Mike had never gone to the kitchen before. He entered the kitchen in a hurry to find fruits. He had just found fruits and had not washed them yet when he remembered something. Then he took out his phone quickly to make a call. "Hello, I need a private room for dinner. The more expensive, the better."

Cora had already finished expressing her guilty to Roxanne and Livia.

"Mom, that's enough." Collin reminded. "Roxanne doesn't like to talk much."

Cora glared at Collin, but she restrained herself in the end. "Alright, I'll stop. You must treat her well. Don't bully her."

Collin nodded.

Roxanne thought that Collin's mother would be very difficult to get along with, but she never expected that even though Cora looked unyielding, she was rather easy-going.

"You guys take a seat first. I'll go and see if Mike has cut the fruit." Cora stood up, thought for a moment, and shouted again, "Collin, come to help your dad."

Collin knew that she was going to lecture him, and pinched Roxanne's finger comfortingly before getting up.

After entering the kitchen, Cora closed the kitchen door, looked at Collin, and asked, "Tell me, did you hire someone to fool me?"

"Didn't I call you during the New Year?" Collin pointed outside. "That's her."

"But you didn't tell me that you had a child!" Cora was trying to recall something. "Are you sure that she's your child? No, you didn't lie to me, right?"

"Collin, this matter concerns the two families. Tell me, is that child yours?" Mike also asked in a low voice.

"Yes." Collin took out a certificate from his pocket and said, "I was afraid you won't believe me. So I went to the hospital to do a DNA report the next day after I came back. Take a look."

He showed the report before them.

Cora was overjoyed when she saw it, but after that, she asked nervously, "Roxanne doesn't know it, right?"

"No." Collin said frankly, "She suggested I do it."

Mike raised his eyebrows and nodded thoughtfully. He exchanged a look with Cora.

Cora nodded as well, and she had a slightly better impression of Roxanne. "This child..." Suddenly she thought of something serious and asked Collin immediately, "What exactly happened between the two of you? How could you hide it from me for so long? Your child is already at such an age, but mom still arranges blind dates for you every day. If you brought her here earlier, there wouldn't be so many unnecessary things to do."
