The Ex-Husband's Revenge By Dragonsky Chapter 235

“Well, clearly fate wanted us to run into each other, so why don't we go inside together?” He said lightheartedly.

“No thanks. I'm here for a meeting, so I won't be able to join, unfortunately.” Leon shook his head.

Leon was an orphan, and the only way he managed to get into college was because he worked hard his whole life to save up for his college fund. However, because he hailed from poverty, he was always looked down by his classmates and did not have many friends.

Not only that, but he was a shy person and mostly kept to himself.

Dominic was the total opposite; He hailed from a wealthy family who owned millions of dollars in assets. Therefore, Dominic was always the popular kid and the target of many girls' fancies during his college days.

Leon and Dominic were never the type of people one would expect to hang out together, but not only that, Dominic used to pick on Leon a lot during college.

Besides, no one invited him to the gathering, so of course, he would not want to attend.

Dominic grabbed hold of Leon's arm. “You're not planning to go? I won't allow it! We haven't seen each other in such a long time, and it would be such a pity if you didn't come!”

“No, I have a meeting to attend, and I can't possibly cancel...” Leon was just about to turn down Dominic's offer once more when Sean interjected, “That's enough, Leon. All of us heard about what happened, so you don't need to be embarrassed anymore! Besides, Janice is going to be there today, so aren't you going to see her?”

Even though Leon lost contact with his college mates, his marriage to Marilyn and subsequent divorce were the talk of the town, so naturally, all of them heard.

“Janice is here too?” a surge of warmth spread into Leon's heart as Janice's pretty face materialized in his mind's eye.

Janice was their class representative in college, and even though she was a quiet girl, she was kind and thoughtful, and one of the only people who were willing to help Leon when everyone looked down on him.

Since she helped him tremendously in the past, Leon always stayed friends with her throughout college, but unfortunately, he lost contact with her after marrying Marilyn.

“Alright...I'll come.” He finally gave in.

He did not see Janice in a long time now and was curious to find out how she was doing. Therefore, he wanted to see her in person and ask for her number to keep in touch.

As for his meeting with Cynthia, he knew that Cynthia would call him once she arrived, so it would not be unreasonable for him to leave the gathering once she arrived.

Leon, Dominic, and Sean entered a private booth in the hotel restaurant.

When the three of them arrived, most of the guests were already there and engaged in conversation.

Leon glanced around the room and quickly caught sight of Janice.

Even though he did not see her in a few years, he could not help noticing that she was even prettier than he remembered.

She seemed to have grown out of her shell and was now more confident and poised than before. Her gentle smile and demure aura made her stand out from the crowd easily.

“Dom, you're finally here!”

“We've been waiting for you!”

“That's right! I was beginning to wonder if you'd come-”

A few of Leon's old college mates made a beeline toward them when they noticed Dominic's arrival.

Even the girls seemed to straighten up when they heard this, all except for Janice. They turned to gaze at tall, handsome Dominic, their faces etched with sultry smiles of admiration.
