Leon shook his head. Despite answering Janice's questions, his attention already flew far away; he thought of Iris and wondered how he would even begin to explain everything to her.

"That's good!" Janice let out a sigh of relief, and a smile spread across her face.

Even though Leon denied being an item with Iris, she could tell from his tone that he was interested in Iris too.

However, this did not matter; she and Leon had such a strong basis for their relationship, perhaps Leon liked her too without knowing himself.

As long as Iris and Leon were not dating, she still stood a chance of making Leon hers!

Besides, she and Leon had seven years of extra time spent together, and there was no way Iris would be able to surpass that!

"What did you just say, Janice? I couldn't hear you clearly," Leon asked.

"Nothing..." Janice bit her lip.

She could not help recalling her mother's advice; her mother was right to say that Leon was a good man and that she needed to seize the opportunity to be with him before he caught other women's eyes.

At the thought of this, Janice summoned all the courage she had to inch closer to Leon's back and wrap both her arms around his waist. Her heart was racing in her chest.

Their bodies were pressed against each other, and Leon immediately stiffened when he felt two soft, warm bulges squeezing against his back.

He did not know why Janice would do this all of a sudden and wondered if perhaps she still felt a little shocked over the events that unfolded, or if she was just doing this because she treated him like family.

However, he was still a grown man after all, and the feeling of Janice's curves against his back made his breath catch in his throat. He could not help his thoughts from traveling to someplace he knew he should not have.

He managed to send Janice home, albeit having to sit through the entire ride in a fluster.

Herace and Leanne were overjoyed to see their daughter arrive home safe, and after learning that Leon saved her from peril, they could not help thanking Leon profusely for his help.

After some brief conversation, Leon left on his motorcycle, anxious to get home so that he could explain himself to Iris.

Dragonbay Villa.

It was already 10 p.m. by the time Leon arrived home, and both Iris and Louisa already tucked themselves into bed.

Leon paced in front of Iris' bedroom and finally mustered the courage to knock on her door.

"Who is it?" Iris's melodic voice rang out from inside the room.

"It's me, Iris. Please open the door, I have something to say to you..." Leon replied sheepishly.

"I've gone to bed. Please go away and we can talk tomorrow!" Iris's voice turned cold when she realized it was Leon.

"Please don't do this. Iris, please open the door. I only have a few things to say..." Leon refused to take no for an answer.

However, Iris was already determined to ignore him; no matter how hard he knocked, she would not open the door for him.

"Creak"

The door on the other side of the hallway was flung open as Louisa strode out of the room, dressed in a silky nightgown. "Can you stop knocking, Lewd? My cousin is angry at you, and no matter how hard you try, she won't open the door for you!"
