Chapter 159 Stay Safe

“What happened?”

Seeing Sarah staring at her so intently, Valerie raised an eyebrow and asked.

“No, nothing...”

Sarah, who was discovered, immediately shrank back.

Phil smiled, and a gentle laughter escaped his lips.

“It was almost noon, and I went to buy food for you.”

“Ah, it’s alright Phil. I have some things to do next, so I won’t disturb you guys.”

“V–Valerie!”

“What were you doing?”

“Well, um, thank you. We, we are now considered friends...”

Sarah’s face started turning red.

Nervously.

She really wanted to be friends with Valerie.

But Valerie did not respond to Sarah’s words immediately.

It was extremely awkward for a moment.

Phil had foresight, he declared that he would go buy food first, and then he walked out of the room.

Sarah's eager anticipation turned into nervousness and uncertainty during Valerie's prolonged silence.

"Sarah, I took you in simply because your situation reminded me of mine, and we are both the same age. If I don't help you, no one else will."

I remember what you have done to me in the past, and I am not holding grudges. However, I can't help but feel that even if I forgive you, I may still have some concerns about you.

Even if you were a good person, in the future, we could become good partners, but maybe not good friends.

That's all we have to say, and we will each go our own way.

Valerie finished speaking and left the ward.

Sarah and Beatrice stayed in the ward. Sarah listened to Valerie's speech, and a bitterness spread throughout her heart.

The uncomfortable feeling made Sarah's mouth tremble, and the sound of her crying had already reached her throat.

But she still held back, Beatrice saw tears welling up in her eyes, already sobbing, but she managed not to cry out.

Nervously, he got up and checked Sarah's whole body, thinking that she was feeling unwell.

"Leo, don't cry, don't cry. Was it very painful?"

"No, no, Beatrice, I wasn't in pain."

Just a little bit of heartache.

Chapter 159 Stay Safe (1)

40 Wanchers

If only I had known today, why did I have to do it back then?

Although at that time, it was not the method I had in mind, but they did it only with my tacit approval.

This was all caused by myself.

So Valerie didn't want to be good friends with herself, and she could understand that.

It just made her a little sad.

Valerie explained the situation to Sarah and they walked to the entrance of the hospital. They saw Ramona standing in the lobby, waiting for them.

Valerie widened her eyes and quickened her pace to reach Ramona's room.

"Auntie Ramona!"

Ramona heard Valerie's voice and quickly turned around. She saw Valerie running toward her, and felt relieved.

"Valerie! Are you okay?"

I saw the news that someone was trying to kidnap you at the place you live. And your classmate also suffered. Is that true?"

Ramona knew it, it seemed like everyone at home already knew.

“I called you, but you didn’t answer.

Ah, I had put my phone on silent.

“Sorry, Auntie Ramona, I had put my phone on silent.”

Ramona looked Valerie up and down and, seeing that she was not seriously injured, felt much relieved,

“By the way, Randal and Calvin just contacted you and said they wanted you to meet them.”

The result was that I kept silent and sought out Ramona.

Valerie nodded.

“I got it, Auntie Ramona. I’ll go over right away.”

It should be related to today’s kidnapper.

“I will take you there, leave your small battery here, and I will bring you back later.”

“It’s okay, I’ll have Calvin find someone to bring me back. We might need to talk for a while.”

Ramona looked at Valerie with a slight pang of concern and grabbed her hand, leading her toward the car.

Feeling the rough calluses in my hands.
