Chapter 71 Tucker Is Heartbroken

“Ah! Grandpa! It hurts so much!”

“What’s all this noise! Shut up! Weren’t you supposed to go back to the army? If Randal finds out you’re out like this...”

Galen looked at the suddenly appearing grandson in front of him, and his eye brows were almost furrowed to the point of deformation.

Came back again!!

Why do you love to mess around so much!

“I found out from Randal that the Horton family’s little girl came to our house!”

“What’s it to you!”

Unfortunately, Galen was standing at the door now, not making any loud noises and restraining his movements and volume so as not to wake Valerie up.

“I knew I was wrong! Grandpa, I just wanted to have a look at this little girl!”

“What are you looking at? Don’t disturb her rest! If you want to see, wait until she wakes up in the evening!”

In the end, Galen couldn’t resist his grandson. If he had continued to disagree, he might have been constantly pestered by him, asking him to let him in.

After he put it in, no one knew what he would do.

He still needs to be given an accurate number.

But this time, Calvin didn’t leave immediately. He clasped his hands together and looked at Galen with a pleading expression.

“Grandpa! Please! Let me just take a look inside!”

As he spoke, he walked into the doorway, really wanting to take a look at this promising candidate he thought highly of

Before Galen could speak, Calvin quickly held his breath and opened the door to the room.

Walking into the dim room, my gaze fell upon Valerie sleeping on the bed.

His footsteps visibly slowed down, afraid that stepping down would make a sound.

He came gently in front of Valerie, the little girl who could only be seen in the video yesterday, but today she miraculously came to his house.

He looked at Valerie, who was breathing evenly, and suddenly reached out to wipe off a spot on her clean clothes.

Then, cautiously, he approached and tremblingly poked her cheek.

Hiss.

So slippery and soft, even smoother than Derek’s face.

He was just too thin.

“Calvin! Come out!”

Galen was furious and could only scold him in a low voice to come out quickly.

Valerie was sleeping lightly when she felt some movement around her. She turned her head slightly to look toward Calvin.

“This, Grandpa! She, she is waking up!”

Calvin was a bit flustered, and he quickly widened his eyes, seeking help as he looked toward the door.

Ramona hurriedly entered and pushed Calvin out disdainfully.

“Don’t disturb her rest after I told you! She is feeling very weak now, having caught a cold. What are you going in for?”

After Galen came out, he immediately kicked him in the butt.

Guilty Calvin didn’t say a word. He smiled awkwardly and hurriedly retreated to his room, planning to take a shower and rest, waiting for Valerie to wake up.

Ramona came to Valerie’s side and skillfully tapped on Valerie’s little belly in rhythm.

This was a gesture that Ramona used to help Tucker fall asleep when he was little.

Dizzy-headed Valerie felt waves of warmth on her body, along with a comforting sensation.

She fell back asleep in a daze once again, and Ramona remained kneeling by the bed, watching.

Suddenly, she took out her phone, turned on the bedside night light, and started taking pictures of Valerie’s little face.

Her sleeping posture was really adorable.

Ramona took several photos before finally stopping. She then opened the Fisher family’s family group.

The last piece of information is that Galen took photos of flowers in the garden in the morning.

She chose one or two photos that she thought were cute and posted them in the group.

Tucker: What happened?

Raymond: Whose is it?

Steven: How adorable! Whose friend's daughter is this?

Randal: She was Ms. Horton.

Tucker: Why was Valerie at our house??

Steven: What happened?

The family group suddenly exploded with commotion as Randal began explaining in the group why Valerie had appeared in the Fisher family.

But Tucker, who had just come out of the hospital, refused to do it.

His slow footsteps suddenly quickened, and he returned to the nanny car.

“Hurry back to the Fisher family!”

“Ah, yes!”

The agent in the driver's seat was completely stunned by Tucker's excitement. Without saying a word, he quickly started the car and drove toward the Fisher family.

Tucker looked at the photo of Valerie sleeping on his phone and suddenly had a bad idea...

The car stopped just outside the Fisher family's house, and he didn't even wear his coat. He carried it in his hands and ran into the house.

"Mom!"

Tucker gasped for breath as he entered the room and saw Ramona in the living room, looking at Valerie's photo.

"My son has come back."

"Mom, what's going on? Why was Valerie at our house?"

Speaking of this, Ramona's face didn't look good either, she was a bit torn about whether to tell Tucker or not.

After all, Tucker liked Valerie so much in the variety show, if he knew that Valerie appeared in the Fisher family like this.

She was afraid that his emotional excitement would once again be bad for his health.

Tucker saw that Ramona was not speaking and he knew that this matter was not so simple.

My own mother was worried about her complexion, and I could clearly see it. She believed that if she mentioned Valerie's situation, it would have a negative impact on her own health.

He took a deep breath and decided to set aside this issue for now.

"Never mind, Mom, take me to see Valerie first."

"Okay, upstairs."

12:56 D

Chapter 71 Tucker is Heartbroken

This was the first time Tucker had been so emotionally expressive, and Ramona found it intriguing. She immediately took him to Valerie's room.

The door opened gently once again.

Tucker gave his coat to Ramona and carefully walked inside himself.

He looked at Valerie, who was lying in bed, feeling confused and worried in his heart.

He was also feeling unwell now, with a slight fever, so he was a little far away from Valerie.

He stood still for a while, then he approached and tidied up Valerie's blanket once again before quietly leaving.

"Okay, Mom, can you tell me now why Valerie was at our house?"

"Tucker, promise Mom first that you won't get too excited when you find out."

Well, it seems that it was indeed not a good thing.

But he still nodded.

He was willing to accept.

Ramona also slowly spoke to Tucker, describing the scene when Lamar brought Valerie back in the morning, as well as Galen's analysis.

Tucker's breathing became faster as he listened, and he pursed his lips.

"Mom, Valerie most likely ran away from home. And there's one more thing you don't know, the reason I got sick is also related to the Horton family."

Now it was Ramona's turn to be puzzled.

"Did the Horton family bully you?"

This was the first thing that came to mind as a mother, Ramona's tone became a bit stern, with a serious expression on her face.

He seemed ready for a fight at any moment.

Tucker approached and took the coat from Ramona's hand, intertwining their fingers as they walked downstairs.

He spoke to his own mother with an unfriendly expression on his face about Bruce's conversation that day.

Tsk.

Pah.

I felt like something dirty had entered my mouth.

Tucker's expression was as disgusted as it could be.

His gaze shifted toward Valerie, who was sleeping upstairs.

The intense heartache made his nose feel sour.

Such a little child...

How outrageous must the Horton family have been for her to be so eager to leave home?

That was home.

Chapter 72 Are You Hungry?

When Valerie woke up, the whole room was pitch black.

Her limbs were still so weak and powerless.

But compared to the chaotic feeling in the morning, it is much more comfortable now.

Suddenly, a burst of noise came from outside the door. She suddenly felt a bit nervous and immediately pulled the blanket up to her face, only exposing half of her head.

Covered myself tightly.

His eyes uneasily looked toward the door.

Outside the door were all the members of the Fisher family. She felt a little embarrassed and didn't know how to thank and face them.

The sound of speaking stopped at the door, and under Valerie's gaze, the door slowly opened.

One, two, three... were revealed.

Six heads.

"!! Tucker!"

The variety show has already ended, and Valerie saw Tucker appear at that moment.

The mood was like setting off a big firework.

The uneasiness and tension that were lingering in the depths of my eyes just a moment ago disappeared without a trace.

Tucker saw Valerie wake up; his worries diminished. He turned on the room's light and then walked toward Valerie.

Just woke up, Valerie exuded a drowsy feeling exclusive to those who had just woken up.

She looked at Tucker walking toward her, feeling relieved in her heart.

Sitting on the edge of the bed, Tucker skillfully held Valerie on his lap and then wrapped her up with a thick blanket.

Seeing the mask on Tucker's face, Valerie suddenly sat up straight.

"Tucker, are you feeling better now?"

When this sentence came out, it made everyone else in the room, including Tucker, feel a sudden jolt in their hearts.

Tucker chuckled and pointed his slender, well-defined fingers at her nose.

"Is it the time to care about me now? Do you know that you have caught a cold too?"

Galen couldn't resist any longer, he also came and sat down by the bed, facing Valerie.

"Little girl, are you awake? Are you hungry? If you're hungry, Grandpa will have someone prepare some light food for you to eat, okay?"

A departure from the usual, unlike the previous authoritative Galen, the current Galen is so gentle that it shocks the Fisher family.

Facing the smiling old man in front of her, Valerie silently nodded.

She was really hungry.

Last night, she only had a piece of fruit and a small cake. She really didn't have any energy.

Galen was overjoyed, the sweet and obedient little girl really touched his heart!

He immediately asked the servant at home to make some porridge. The wrinkles at the corners of his eyes were almost piling up from his laughter, and he occasionally reached out to poke Valerie's cheek.

At this point, everyone in the room was itching to take action.

They didn't speak, but the ever-decreasing distance between them said it all.

After coming back from school, Derek looked at Valerie, who was surrounded by her family. Suddenly, he also squeezed forward and stood face to face with her.

"Valerie, you will stay at my house next."

Derek's words instantly turned the warm atmosphere into an extremely tense one.

Valerie looked at the little boy in front of her in surprise, realizing that she didn't have much interaction with him at school.

But it is an undeniable fact that I have been helped by him several times.

Galen let out a long sigh of relief.

“Valerie, why did you appear in the park? We probably understand now. Tucker also told me. Bruce seems to treat you very badly. You ran over here alone last night.”

“Did your family treat you badly? Is that why you ran away?”

Sure enough, Valerie, the pillar of the Fisher family, turned pale in an instant, and she felt a little anxious.

But in the end, he slowly nodded.

And then lowered the little head.

Forget it, consider yourself as a stubborn and temperamental child.

Whose child is so young and has such a bad temper that they actually ran away from home?

Valerie had already accepted their change in attitude toward herself.

Holding Valerie, Tucker looked at her like this, feeling a pang in his heart.

He patted Valerie’s back.

“Valerie, we have kept your escape a secret from your family. You can stay here peacefully and take care of yourself until they come looking for you. Understand?”

Hmm?

Valerie’s head lifted up again, looking at Tucker with confusion, and then turning to Galen.

Galen nodded confidently.

“Yeah! Valerie, you stayed! Grandpa watched your livestream earlier! The bread you baked looks so delicious! And it seems so fragrant, I wonder if Grandpa will have a chance to taste your skills?”

“Dad, Valerie is still lying down, and you’re already thinking so far ahead?”

Lamar chuckled helplessly as he looked at Valerie, who was nestled in his son’s arms like a lump of sticky rice dumpling.

His hands also itched a little, recalling the feeling of holding her hand in the morning.

Lamar said that he wanted to hug one more time.

Valerie’s mind was still a mess, and she was indecisive.

Suddenly, a cold touch attached to her forehead.

Derek did not stay with the group of adults. He conscientiously came over to Valerie’s side and reached out to check her body temperature.

“It’s still a bit high, just settle down properly. My family quite likes you, so you don’t need to overthink it.”

The words Derek spoke didn’t quite match his age, but strangely enough, they still seemed to fit.

You would feel that this was his true nature.

He was a careful and gentle person, not as arrogant as he appeared on the surface.

Valerie looked into his eyes, and the two of them stared at each other for a long time.

It was not until Tucker cleared his throat that she came to her senses.

“Valerie, don’t overthink it. During the following time, I also mostly stayed at home to take care of my health. When the time comes, I will be with you, so you won’t have to feel so awkward.”

Tucker knew where Valerie’s point of disagreement was, so he secretly whispered in her ear.

Sure enough, as soon as he finished saying these words, Valerie immediately nodded in agreement.

Derek saw Valerie agree, and he felt a little relieved in his heart.

At this moment, the servant brought up the cooked porridge and side dishes. He was faster than anyone else, placing them on a small table by Valerie’s bed.

Calvin, who had been observing all along, witnessed Derek’s every move from beginning to end.

He was so shocked that he couldn’t utter a single word.

Is this the arrogant kid who used to challenge himself?

His gaze toward Valerie was even more intense than before.

If I had seen her before, it was because she was a well-trained seedling with a good character.

So now, she became the ultimate weapon in Calvin’s eyes that could suppress Derek.

Without hesitation, he strode up to Valerie.

Suddenly, he bent down, bringing himself closer to Valerie and locking eyes with her.

When their eyes met, Calvin's pupils contracted intensely.

The sudden approach made Valerie instinctively close her eyes, blink rapidly, turn her head to the side, and step back.

In addition to Derek, who was preparing dinner for Valerie, there were also Ramona and her son.

The other three people exchanged glances and silently left the room, giving him space.

“Grandfather...”

Calvin lowered his tone, he had just gotten so close, it was not intentional at all.

He really didn't expect Valerie to be scared.

In Galen's mind, recalling the video of Valerie being beaten, he glared at Calvin with displeasure.

“Did you also watch her live stream? Can't you pay a little attention?”

“Was...”

This time, Calvin had nothing to say.

He obediently lowered his head and admitted his mistake, accepting Galen's scolding.

Lamar tapped Galen's shoulder.

“Okay, Dad, Calvin didn't mean to do it.”

The three of them fell into silence once again.

“You guys should take good care of her next. Oh, by the way, we don't have any clothes for a little girl at home. I'll go and check now, and buy some. After that, all of you should be careful not to scare her, okay?”

Galen had been thinking about this matter for a long time. He had already been pondering over this question while having dinner.

The clothes at home were all for boys, and there were only clothes for daughters-in-law in women's clothing, which Valerie couldn't wear.

Now he didn't waste a moment and went with the butler to pick out beautiful clothes for Valerie.

Valerie drank two bowls of porridge with side dishes, under the gaze of a crowd.

Derek stared at her as she sipped the drink in small sips. He held a piece of white paper in his hand, folding it in half and fanning it toward the large bowl of white porridge, repeatedly.

He didn't want her to get burned.

Tucker occasionally glanced at Derek standing beside him, his eyes filled with a hint of surprise.

But it quickly subsided.

At home, the only person I had a good relationship with was Derek.

The two individuals had different conditions, but the situations were similar.

They all had an inexplicable sense of helplessness.

This cousin will have a different opinion about Valerie, Tucker doesn't find it strange.

"Valerie, after you have recovered, don't go to school for classes. I will come back to give you private lessons. Otherwise, if you go to school, your family members will come looking for you."

Derek held the empty bowl that Valerie had finished eating, exerting a slight force with his hand.

Valerie glanced at the little boy in front of her and couldn't help but feel like laughing.

Did they come up to me directly when I arrived at school?

The possibility is really slim, even if it was found.

She could already imagine what they would say.

But this would trouble him, and Valerie felt a little embarrassed.

“That would be troublesome for you, Derek. After school, please come to Valerie’s room to give her extra lessons.”

Without waiting for Valerie to speak, Tucker answered for her directly, not giving Valerie any chance to refuse.

Derek’s eyes were fixed on Valerie as he observed her expression. He saw her nodding in agreement to Tucker’s words.

He relaxed his grip on the bowl.

“Okay, no problem. Remember to take your medicine and rest well.”

Derek, who used to be arrogant toward others during the day, had completely lost his arrogant demeanor in front of Valerie.

Ramona came in carrying a basin and ointment.

“Alright, the men have all gone out.

could have been done by the maid, but Ramona remembered the video of her being beaten in the morning, so she took over the task.

She was afraid that the servants would not be careful and hurt Valerie.

So heavy.

This was the first time Ramona felt it.

Valerie's statement was not a complaint...

She could feel it.

Just like the inevitable outcome of certain things, she had already said it with indifference.

"Ah..."

Ramona, a florist and tea artist, sighed to relieve the bitterness in her heart. She was a sensitive combination herself.

She could only gently pat Valerie's back now, asking her not to be sad.

"If you don't go back, then don't go back, the Fisher family will be fine!"

She really thought so now.

As drowsiness gradually overcame Valerie, Ramona quickly fed her medicine and then watched her fall asleep.

Looking at her peaceful sleeping face. Ramona wiped the corners of her slightly moist eyes and went out with a basin in her hands.

Hmm?

The door was not closed tightly.

Ramona gently kicked open the door and was startled to see Derek squatting against the wall.

"Derek? What were you doing?"

"It's nothing. Auntie Ramona. Goodnight."

After Derek stood up, he said goodnight to Ramona and went back to his own room.

His heart sank bit by bit after hearing Valerie's words.

A sleepless night...

When Valerie woke up, the sun had not yet risen. The pale blue of the early morning and the crisp bird chirping made her mind clear.

She gently pulled back the curtains, revealing Galen's exclusive garden below.

It was around six in the morning, and Galen had already been watering the flowers and turning the soil below.

Valerie quickly put on her slippers, grabbed her coat, and went to the garden.

"Good morning, Grandfather."

Immersed in watering the plants, Galen suddenly heard Valerie's sweet voice saying good morning to him.

He stared with round eyes at the little child, who stood on the other side of the glass door, greeting him with an innocent face.

Hmm! How adorable!

Galen, who had been wearing a serious expression, burst into laughter

when faced with Valerie.

He quickly bent down to put down the kettle and gloves in his hands, and then went forward to hug Valerie.

He had been itching for a hug all day yesterday, and finally got it this morning.

"Grandpa, were you watering the flowers?"

"Yes, Grandpa is watering the flowers. Why did Valerie wake up so early? Is he not feeling well?"

As soon as Galen thought of this reason, his smiling face disappeared instantly, and he reached out a hand to touch Valerie's forehead.

It didn't seem so hot anymore.

“Grandpa! It's me, I, ...”

No one has ever bought clothes for her.

She was a little flustered.

She quickly straightened up her upper body and spoke to Galen a little nervously.

“What's wrong? Grandpa bought you clothes, and you're not happy?”

Valerie was asked and remained speechless; she had never experienced such a thing before.

She could only answer using her previous life's way of handling things.

“Grandpa, you were really too polite! I feel embarrassed.”

Valerie said this sentence with a panicked expression, causing Galen to abruptly stop in his tracks.

“Valerie, where did you learn this sentence from?”

Valerie's mouth remained open.

How should she explain it?

Were all these things figured out by yourself after you entered society and experienced hardships?

She was just a seven-year-old child now.

The open little mouth slowly closed.

She chose to remain silent.

Galen was extremely heartbroken!

Just as Calvin said, her eyes had the look of someone who had experienced life and death.

But now, her gaze is even more chilling and unsettling than the gaze of someone who has experienced life and death.

He quickly shut up and stared at Valerie fixedly.

“Valerie... Grandfather wouldn't just buy clothes for anyone; do you know why he bought them for you?”

“Why?”

Valerie asked cautiously, not daring to breathe.

Galen's halted footsteps resumed, only this time he walked slowly.

“That was because grandpa liked you very much.”

He smiled, trying his best to show his gentlest side.

Speak this sentence in the gentlest tone possible.

Valerie's hand trembled as she looked at Galen with a hint of confusion.

This was uncertain.

She didn't understand why Galen would like her:

She didn't do anything substantial to make the other person like her.

Galen looked at her expression and chuckled lightly.

“You and Tucker’s live broadcast in the variety show, Grandpa hardly missed any of them!”

So

Grandpa knows that you are a very good child, buying clothes for you is the best proof. Grandpa said, “I don’t easily buy clothes for anyone, except for my spouse, you are the second one!”

“If Valerie is really sorry, Grandpa has been craving your cooking for a long time. When you recover from your cold, how about making a meal for Grandpa?”

He swallowed his saliva and pretended to be greedy.

This was Galen giving Valerie the stairs.

Upon hearing that Galen wanted to eat the meal she had made, Valerie set aside her dessert for a moment.

“Um! I would do it for grandpa!”
