Chapter 27

27 – Caleb taunts Hunter It wasn’t right but it felt good. He belonged to someone else but when they found themselves in this situation, it was clear that their passion burned like they belonged to each other. His lips were soft, his tongue diving into the corners of her mouth. She pressed her hand at the back of his head, deepening the kiss. Her whole being craved and accepted him. She didn’t want him to stop and was ready to give him herself again when he suddenly recoiled and pulled away

Dissatisfaction, like a wave of cold breeze, froze her to the spot. He didn’t want her. He didn’t want to offend his arranged bride. It was well understood. Jenna’s back against the wall dropped, her face fell. She must have seduced him with her outfit but he wasn’t a fool. Casper’s mind was clouded. He didn’t know why he kissed her after that night. He wasn’t someone who went back on his words. I’m sorry for doing that. I shouldn’t have.”

He was right but why did her heart feel like it was going to tear? They weren’t supposed to do this anymore but it felt too good and his apology was like ripples of pain. She knew it was because of his arranged bride.

“I’m sorry. You aren’t supposed to cheat on your spouse,” she uttered apologetically, her head lowered so she couldn’t see Casper’s darkened gaze. He wasn’t married yet but was going to be, so she might as well assume that it already was.

‘Was that what she thought? I need to clarify this.’ “It’s nothing like that. After the last time, you kept avoiding me and I don’t want that to happen again.” He respected her emotions more than the passion raging inside of him to have another taste of her. To give her chains of orgasms that would make her scream his name. How could he have known that doing it once with her would awaken all these in him?

‘So that was it.’ Somehow, she regretted her childishness over the weekend. It was going well till he stopped. So what if he was going to marry someone else later? She would just leave the country when the time came. For now, she won’t deny that he started a fire that wouldn’t quench and won’t be surprised to have more wet dreams tonight. Between her thighs, she could feel the sensation that won’t leave her alone and her core was already wet, moistening her panty

However, her pride won’t allow her to tell him that it was okay. She pursed her lips, nodded, and left the office. She endured the burning sensation and didn’t look back ‘Yes, a woman should have self control,’ she encouraged herself.

As soon as the door shut, Casper felt an indescribable emptiness in his heart. It wasn’t the first time but this time was just more hollow. Anytime he was away from Jenna, he felt that something was missing in his life.

This time, it was so bad that his mind was in a mess. He decided to divert his attention by seeing how the test was going. Depending on Hunter’s strength, he would know what to do for him. Whether he liked it or not, he had to help Hunter because Jenna asked him to.

At the testing room, Peggy sat on a waiting chair close to Caleb, while Hunter fought with Cathan. It seemed they were both capable because one could hardly get hit by the other’s blow and even if any of them did, the other would quickly return it.

Peggy wasn’t surprised because Hunter fought the hoodlums who almost assaulted her. He was very strong “Why do you love him?” Caleb asked Peggy. Peggy was stunned. She wasn’t expecting Caleb to talk to her because he seemed so cold and distant.

“We can’t control the direction our heart goes and who they fall for, right?” Peggy couldn’t tell her reason for loving Hunter. She only knew that from the moment he saved her from the guy who stole her belongings when she was nearing her apartment, she fell in love with him.

That night, she was walking to her apartment from a grocery store when she felt a gun on her head. It was late with no one around so she cooperated and gave the guy everything. Still, before she reached her house all trembling, someone else approach belongings. It was Hunter. When she asked him why he risked his life for her, he said she reminded him of his late sister. That was when it all started.

Caleb was at a loss when it came to matters of love. Thus, he couldn’t agree with Peggy. “I don’t know about that.”

Peggy wasn’t surprised by his answer. She could read him like a book, wondering what inspired him to keep living. “Have you ever been in love?”

Caleb’s cold emotionless voice instantly rang,

“No.”

Peggy’s suspicions were confirmed. All that someone like Caleb knew were guns, alcohol and blood. Maybe some smoke too would do. “Then it’s right for you to think that way .You are not wrong.” “What do you mean?” Caleb was even more perplexed by the answers she gave. He never tried falling in love because he never wanted to endanger any woman’s life but it didn’t mean he wasn’t interested in knowing about love. He knew that if Casper was able to curb the feud among the mafia’s he would find a woman his heart loved. Now that Peggy was more experienced in the things of love, he naturally wanted to learn from her. Yes, he could be humble if he needed something.

“Have you been shot before?” Peggy asked him. Without thinking much, he responded, “a number of times.” Peggy’s eyes brightened with curiosity. “Is it painful?” “Yes,” Caleb answered, wondering what kind of stupid question that was. Even without being shot, one could tell that it’s a painful experience. If not, why would people die from getting shot?

“Now that’s what I mean. I don’t know how the pain of a gunshot wound feels because I’ve never been shot before.” Peggy said with a smile. Now Caleb understood what she was driving at. She meant Caleb couldn’t understand her reason for loving Hunter because Caleb has never been in love before. “What will you do if he finds someone he loves and not as a sister?” Caleb lifted his chin, indicating Hunter. “I will let him go.” Peggy was calm. “Ha? Caleb was even more confused. What was the point of loving someone so much just to let them go in the end? “Love is also about letting go. When you love someone who loves someone else, you have to be glad for their happiness and let them go, but as long as Hunter never falls in love with anyone else, I won’t give up,” she shrugged.

Caleb instantly began to see her differently, feeling that she had a beautiful heart. “Have you ever tried to make him feel jealous?”

“Ha?” It was Peggy’s turn to be stunned. Caleb didn’t wait for her response and continued to speak

“I heard somewhere that there is no true love without jealousy. Is it true?” His serious expression made Peggy understand that he wasn’t joking so she continued to explain. “That is a phenomenal saying but there are few exceptions. However, I have never tried to make Hunter jealous.”

The corner of Caleb’s lips lifted. From Hunter’s confession, he didn’t like him a bit. How could he love a woman as a sister? If she isn’t the same blood, then she isn’t a sister. How could a grown man be so little minded? Caleb couldn’t accept it and meant to deal with him a little.

“Maybe you should try it. It might awaken what he doesn’t know is there,” he said in the same indifferent tone.

Peggy didn’t know what Caleb was up to but if what he planned would make Hunter see her as the woman she was, then she was in. “Thank you but how do I do that?”

“Hmmm,” Caleb went into a thoughtful mode. Suddenly, something flashed in his eyes. He looked at Hunter and the corner of his lips curled up. “Why don’t you shift closer?” “Ha?” Peggy was dumbfounded. She has only been close to Hunter. “Just do it.” Caleb’s voice was domineering, she quivered slightly and obeyed. When she drew closer to Caleb, he instinctively snaked his arms around her shoulders. Peggy tensed up, feeling strange. Caleb also felt something odd and quickly said, “smile.” He looked at Hunter, who had just fallen on the ground from a punch. Most probably, it was because of what Caleb did. He smiled when he saw Hunter’s eyes turn red and decided to tease him further. Just as his hand was about to caress Peggy’s hair, a strong force pulled them apart. Hunter threw a punch but Caleb blocked it with his strong arm. He was stronger than Cathan so Hunter didn’t stand a chance. Aside from Casper, Caleb was the strongest. “Why did you touch her?” Hunter raged. His face had turned ugly from frowning so much.

Caleb was suddenly in a good mood, recalling how he and Cathan used to play tricks on Grandpa’s bodyguards. He held Hunter’s hand firmly but didn’t try to hit him. “Why does it concern you? She didn’t push me away, which means she liked it.” Caleb winked at Peggy forcing her to smile in support. Even Peggy was amazed by what had “Whether she likes it or not, no one must touch her.” Hunter’s tone was icy, as his anger burned deeper. Even when he tried to pull away from Caleb, he didn’t make it easy on him.

Cathan was suppressing his laughter from where Hunter had run off to fight Caleb, only to be stifled. He was also amazed at how Caleb spoke a lot today and seemed to be in a playful mood. Nobody had ever seen that side of him till Peggy appeared.

“But you said you don’t love her so what if I do?” Caleb hit the nail on the head.

There was a slight remorse on Hunter’s face but it didn’t wipe the rage he felt when he saw Caleb hugging Peggy. His heart couldn’t take it and he didn’t care that he was being tested, running off to separate them.

“You are not allowed to love her and she isn’t permitted to love anyone too.” When he spoke, his tone was so deadly that Peggy couldn’t help being afraid.

Cathan finally smiled. He got what he wanted, but wondered why Hunter couldn’t admit that he loved Peggy as a woman. He had to get to the bottom of it. Perhaps if he provoked him further, he would confess. “You are selfish.”

“I don’t care. Don’t ever…” Hunter didn’t finish issuing his warning when a deep cold voice rang behind them,

“Enough!”
