Chapter 83

83 – Pregnant Casper’s eyes narrowed dangerously when he saw the woman in his bed. She was wearing see through lingerie and in the dark, he saw everything clearly, growing more and more agitated.

“Get out!” He bellowed coldly.

Donna shivered but wasn’t going to give up. It wasn’t easy for her to convince the guards that Casper knew she was coming. Since he was sleeping and she was his betrothed, they allowed her in so if she goes out now, they would know that she lied, which would ruin any future opportunity of using the same means again.

“I can take care of your needs, don’t be shy.” Her voice was soft and silky, it could melt any man’s heart but not Casper. Donna had dyed her hair black and the lingerie was also black. She went the extra mile to please him but the only woman he wanted was Jenna and he was going to get her back by all means.

“What do you want?” He got out of the bed and draped a towel robe over himself, as he was just in his boxers at the moment.

Disappointment flashed in Donna’s eyes but she blinked with a new resolve. “I want to make it work. Jenna left already. Let’s get married and be happy.”

Casper recalled what Marshall told him. Donna went to see Jenna before grandpa did. He thought of asking her about it, then kicked against it. It was better to not engage her in any conversation, seeing how pretentious the woman was.

“If that’s a dream, you can wake up after five years,” he retorted coldly, crushing her hopes. Donna paled but didn’t give up. This is what she was trained for. She stood from the bed and ambled close to him but didn’t touch him as she feared the man’s coldness.

“What can I do to make you like me?” She asked with innocent eyes, her red lips alluring.

Casper stared at her like a fellow man. “Take a vacation and come back after five years.”

Donna saw that the man was serious. Jenna left but it seems that she carried his heart with her. The thought of it made her eyes darken but she soon regained herself. “Just let me spend the night on the couch, on the floor or wherever you decide. I’ll leave early in the morning.”

‘For people to think that I slept with you? No way.’ Casper saw through her plans.

“Get out!” Casper bellowed harshly, Donna was embarrassed but she discerned that if she gave up now, she would lose other opportunities.

“Please..”

“Do you want me to call the guards or Rex?” Neither of them was a comfortable option for her. She was banned from visiting Casper till after five years so involving Rex might incur another punishment. But how could she be the loser? Casper and Jenna were in love but she had no one.

“You are heartless. I didn’t bargain for this. How do you get to change the rules at the last minute? I sacrificed my life for you.” Donna put on a pitiful expression when he spoke but Casper was unmoved. Neither did he feel any form of guilt. Not after the information he had about the Wreaths.

“I don’t mind giving you compensation.” Casper was blunt. When it was about Donna’s life, she had a point since she wasn’t allowed to see anyone because of him. Casper would not run from responsibilities.

Donna was greatly pained. Casper didn’t care about her at all and there was no hope for the two of them to ever be a happy couple. The man wouldn’t bend no matter how much she tried. Even ice would melt with a bit of fire but the man before her seemed like a Rock.

“You are heartless,” Donna yelled in a teary voice and strutted out of the room, her tears blinding her. Casper looked on unaffected. He was only thinking about how to get Jenna to return to him.

His sleep was already ruined so he went to the study. Without Jenna, he became a workaholic. The next day, he went to pick up a special ring he ordered for Jenna. He could have had it delivered but wanted to inspect it to make sure it was as perfect as what he designed on paper for them. If it wasn’t, he was going to sit there and direct them on what to do.

Two weeks later, Cathan and Kate were getting married. Caleb was the best man and Peggy was the maid of honor. Casper was only looking for Jenna. The large hall in the most expensive hotel was already filled with guests from across the nation. Grandpa couldn’t attend because he was still mourning, making an excuse to the Blade seniors that he wasn’t well.

Casper’s eyes were glued to the entrance, his heart made a flip when Jenna’s figure appeared at the doorway. She was wearing a long, luxurious, black elegant dress, with a black straw hat with claw feathers and a twist. The hat was big and covered half of her face, hiding it from the cameras.

She took her seat at the back and began taking pictures. Casper was happy that she still wore his colors. She even looked more beautiful than he last saw her, which made him envious of her. Perhaps she didn’t miss him as he did. If not for Kate, she wouldn’t have returned to him.

He half concentrated on the events unfolding in front of him, while he half focussed on Jenna. Soon, they had finished exchanging vows and the groom was kissing the bride. Camera flashes rained from all angles.

When he saw her putting her phone into her bag, he stood up and walked over to her. “Jen, come with me.” He stretched his hand towards her.

Jenna lifted her head and smiled, just as she removed her big luxury hat. “Casper, it’s not Jen.”

Casper felt his heart cease. Of course, it wasn’t Jenna. “Anna?” Casper could feel his heart beating faster. The voice was Anna’s but the face looked like Jenna’s from afar. Upon closer look, it was all makeup.

When Anna saw the disappointment on his face, her heart sank. She was glad she couldn’t see his eyes through his sunglasses. Now she understood that Casper loved Jenna far more than she thought.

Whereas, realization dawned on Casper that he had been tricked. Jenna had learned a lot from him and now used it against him. It was painful for someone like him to be outsmarted.

“She didn’t come. You dressed up and made up to look like her to confuse me.” Casper boiled with rage but Anna was calm. She understood the pain he felt and explained slowly,

“She came as me and I as her. Look for yourself.”

Anna showed him a video. Jenna was dressed in a pink and white floral dress. She looked like Anna in the video. Naturally, there wasn’t a facial resemblance between them but the dress and professional make artist did the magic.

“Where is she?” Casper’s eyes began to roam the auditorium curiously. He couldn’t believe that he was going to spend another night without Jenna. The mere thought was enough to drive him crazy. “She already left in a chopper. I waited for her signal before lowering my phone. I’m sorry but she just wants you to move on and be happy.” Anna was polite and her tone was apologetic. She was just there to confuse Casper. Casper sank into the chair beside her, deflated. “Happy? If the pain she’s causing me is her description of happiness, then I’m indeed happy,” he said sarcastically. Anna forced a smile.

“Give her some time. She feels responsible for all the problems among you Blades. She also said that if she hadn’t come into your life, you would have married Donna so you should just pretend that you two never met.” Casper was getting annoyed with the painful words Anna threw at him. “I have to go.” He lifted himself. He had to use a new strategy and couldn’t tell Anna about it.

“Do you have any message for her?” Anna asked behind him. Casper’s response was curt,

“No.”

It was time for refreshment and Casper attended in a sour mood. As soon as the event was over, he told Caleb sternly, “your wedding should be in two weeks.”

Caleb was stunned. “Casper, that’s too short. We haven’t begun with any preparations yet.” “Take a month’s paid leave together with Peggy to sort out everything but the wedding must be in two weeks.”

Seeing how Casper’s mood had turned horrendous, Caleb quickly guessed. “Jenna didn’t come right?”

“She did but I didn’t see her. She unexpectedly tricked me but let Peggy call her to make sure she comes to your wedding. I won’t fall for her tricks this time.” Casper was desperate. Peggy called Jenna to invite her to her wedding and without thinking, Jenna agreed. Two weeks arrived but Jenna didn’t use Anna’s help like before. This time, she used Marshall, who agreed reluctantly.

She knew that Casper would be on the lookout so she didn’t enter the auditorium, while Casper searched everywhere for her. She took pictures from afar with Marshall’s help. When Casper went to the control room to check the CCTV footage, she sneaked in, hugged Peggy, and left.

Hunter called Casper too late because he was Peggy’s bridesman. Cathan had no choice than to still be Caleb’s best man since Casper had lost focus and was only searching for Jenna. The squad were all busy and couldn’t help him so once again, Jenna got away from Casper. He lost all possibilities of getting her back because she knew him too well and played the game better. This time, Casper lost hope. Perhaps, Jenna didn’t love him as much as he thought.

Since that day, he resolved to creating more jobs to keep himself busy. Anytime he was alone or free, he couldn’t stop thinking about her. He even set up a marketing firm for her but since she wasn’t there, he was managing it as the Vice President, still reserving the position of the president for her.

He brought more life into the garden with some peacocks and even the lake had a few swans. He did everything she wanted and yet, she didn’t return to him.

Jenna arrived in Giethoorn with Marshall. As soon as she got out of the boat, a wave of dizziness flung her and she lost her balance but Marshal was swift to catch her in time, carrying her to the room and laying her on the sofa.

“What is wrong with her?” Kira was worried, checking Jenna’s temperature as she asked. Pascal had already retired to bed.

“She passed out. I’ll call the doctor.” Marshall brought out his phone, dialed the doctor’s number, and spoke a few words.

A few minutes later, the doctor arrived. After examining Jenna and taking her blood sample, he left and returned after an hour.
